

P E N G U I N

C L A S S I C S

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

Selected Poems

GENERAL EDITOR, POETRY: CHRISTOPHER RICKS

SELECTED POEMS

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH was born in the Lake District in April 1770, and died there eighty years later on 23 April 1850. He had three brothers and a sister, Dorothy, to whom throughout his life he was especially close. When she was six and he was nearly eight, their mother died. Dorothy was sent away to be brought up by relatives and a year later William was sent to Hawkshead Grammar School, scene of the great childhood episodes of The Prelude.

Wordsworth was cared for in lodgings and led a life of exceptional freedom, roving over the fells that surrounded the village. The death of his father, agent to the immensely powerful landowner Sir James Lowther, broke in on this happiness when he was thirteen, but did not halt the education through nature that complemented his Hawkshead studies and became the theme of his poetry.

As an undergraduate at Cambridge Wordsworth travelled (experiencing the French Revolution at first hand) and wrote poetry. His twenties were spent as a wanderer, in France, Switzerland, Wales, London, the Lakes, Dorset and Germany. In France he fathered a child whom he did not meet until she was nine because of the War. In 1794 he was reunited with Dorothy, and met Coleridge, with whom he published Lyrical Ballads in 1798, and to whom he addressed The Prelude, his epic study of human consciousness.

In the last days of the century Wordsworth and Dorothy found a settled home at Dove Cottage, Grasmere. Here Wordsworth wrote much of his best-loved poetry, and Dorothy her famous Journals. In 1802 Wordsworth married Dorothy's closest friend, Mary Hutchinson.

Gradually he established himself as the great poet of his age, a turning-point coming with the collected edition of 1815. From 1813 Wordsworth and his family lived at Rydal Mount in the neighbouring valley to Grasmere. In 1843 he became Poet Laureate.

STEPHEN GILL is a Professor of English Literature at Oxford University and a Fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford. He holds degrees from Oxford and Edinburgh Universities and is a long-serving member of the Wordsworth Trust. He has written William Wordsworth: A Life (1989) and Wordsworth and the Victorians (1998). He began his career as an editor of Wordsworth, inaugurating the Cornell Wordsworth series with an edition of the Salisbury Plain Poems.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH

Selected Poems

Edited and with an Introduction and Notes by STEPHEN GILL

PENGUIN BOOKS

PENGUIN BOOKS

Published by the Penguin Group

Penguin Books Ltd, 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England

Penguin Group (USA) Inc., 375 Hudson Street, New York, New York 10014, USA

Penguin Books Australia Ltd, 250 Camberwell Road, Camberwell, Victoria 3124, Australia

Penguin Books Canada Ltd, 10 Alcorn Avenue, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M4V 3B2

Penguin Books India (P) Ltd, 11 Community Centre, Panchsheel Park, New Delhi – 110 017, India

Penguin Group (NZ), Cnr Airborne and Rosedale Roads, Albany, Auckland 1310, New Zealand

Penguin Books (South Africa) (Pty) Ltd, 24 Sturdee Avenue, Rosebank 2196, South Africa

Penguin Books Ltd, Registered Offices: 80 Strand, London WC2R 0RL, England www.penguin.com

First published 2004

1

Editorial material copyright © Stephen Gill, 2004

All rights reserved

The moral right of the author has been asserted

Except in the United States of America, this book is sold subject to the condition that it shall not, by way of trade or otherwise, be lent, re-sold, hired out, or otherwise circulated without the publisher's prior consent in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser

eISBN: 9781101489291

Contents

Chronology

Introduction

Further Reading

A Note on the Texts

Selected Poems

Old Man Travelling

The Ruined Cottage

A Night-Piece

The Old Cumberland Beggar

Lines Written at a Small Distance from my House

Goody Blake and Harry Gill

The Thorn

The Idiot Boy

Lines Written in Early Spring

Anecdote for Fathers

We Are Seven

Expostulation and Reply

The Tables Turned

Lines Written a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey

The Fountain

The Two April Mornings

‘A slumber did my spirit seal’

Song (‘She dwelt among th’ untrodden ways’)

‘Strange fits of passion I have known’

Lucy Gray

Nutting

‘Three years she grew in sun and shower’

The Brothers

Hart-Leap Well

from Home at Grasmere

from Poems on the Naming of Places

To Joanna

‘A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags’

Michael

‘I travelled among unknown Men’

To a Sky-Lark

Alice Fell

Beggars

To a Butterfly (‘Stay near me’)

To the Cuckoo

‘My heart leaps up when I behold’

To H. C., Six Years Old

‘Among all lovely things my Love had been’

To a Butterfly (‘I’ve watched you’)

Resolution and Independence

‘Within our happy Castle there dwelt one’

‘The world is too much with us’

‘With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh’

‘Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued’

‘Great Men have been among us’

‘It is not to be thought of that the Flood’

‘When I have borne in memory what has tamed’

‘England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean’

Composed by the Sea-Side, near Calais

‘It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free’

To Toussaint L'Ouverture

Composed in the Valley, near Dover, on the Day of Landing

Composed Upon Westminster Bridge

London, 1802

‘Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room’

Yarrow Unvisited

‘She was a Phantom of delight’

Ode to Duty

Ode: Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood

‘I wandered lonely as a Cloud’

Stepping Westward

The Solitary Reaper

Elegiac Stanzas

A Complaint

Gipsies

St Paul's

‘Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind’

Yew-Trees

Composed at Cora Linn

Yarrow Visited

To R. B. Haydon, Esq. (‘High is our calling, Friend!’)

Sequel to the Foregoing [Beggars]

Ode: Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty

The River Duddon: Conclusion

‘The unremitting voice of nightly streams’

Airey-Force Valley

Extempore Effusion Upon the Death of James Hogg

‘Glad sight wherever new with old’

At Furness Abbey

‘I know an aged Man constrained to dwell’

from The Prelude

Book I

Book II

Book III
Book IV
Book V
Book VI
Book VII
Book VIII
Book IX
Book X
Book XI
Book XII
Book XIII

Notes

Index of Titles

Index of First Lines

Chronology

- 1770 7 April: William Wordsworth (W) born at Cockermouth, Cumberland, in the English Lake District.
- 1771 25 September: Dorothy Wordsworth (DW) born at Cockermouth.
- 1778 c. 8 March: Mother, Ann Wordsworth, dies.
- 1779 Enters Hawkshead Grammar School, lodging with Hugh and Ann Tyson.
- 1783 30 December: Father, John Wordsworth, dies.
- 1785 First surviving verse, 'Lines Written as a School Exercise at Hawkshead', and beginnings of composition towards 'The Vale of Esthwaite', neither poem published by W.
- 1787 Enters St John's College, Cambridge.
- 1788–9 Composition of An Evening Walk.
- 14 July 1789: Storming of the Bastille.
- 1790 July–October: Walking tour in France and Switzerland with Robert Jones.
- 1791–2 W. in London.
- November 1791: Returns to France and sees Revolutionary fervour in Paris. Love affair with Annette Vallon and birth of their daughter, Caroline, 15 December 1792. Composes Descriptive Sketches. Returns to England to seek a livelihood.
- 1793 January: Louis XVI executed.
- 1 February: War declared between England and France. Writes but does not publish a seditious Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff. After wandering across Salisbury Plain in a journey to Wales, composes ‘Salisbury Plain’. Sees Tintern Abbey. Publishes An Evening Walk and Descriptive Sketches.

1794 Reunited with DW in stay at Windy Brow, Keswick, in Cumberland.

28 July: Execution of Robespierre.

August–September: Stays at Rampside on the southern coastal tip of the Lake District and sees Peele Castle. Nurses Raisley Calvert, who leaves W £900 on his death in January 1795.

1795 Samuel Taylor Coleridge (C) lectures in Bristol on politics and religion. W a familiar figure in radical circles in London in spring and summer. Meets C and Robert Southey in Bristol. Settles with DW at Racedown in Dorset and rewrites ‘Salisbury Plain’.

1797 Completes play, The Borderers, and moves to Alfoxden in Somerset to be nearer C. First version of ‘The Ruined Cottage’ and plans for joint composition with C.

1798 W completes ‘The Ruined Cottage’ and composes the bulk of the verse published anonymously, with C, as Lyrical Ballads. Plans for The Recluse first mentioned. W, DW and C go to Germany and over winter W writes autobiographical verse, the foundation of The Prelude known as The Two-Part Prelude.

1799 End of April: Back in England.

December: Moves into Dove Cottage, Grasmere, in the Lake District.

1800 Begins ‘Home at Grasmere’, not published by W, and probably composes lines printed in 1814 as a ‘Prospectus’ to The Recluse. Works on poems for second edition of Lyrical Ballads and writes Preface.

1801 January: Second edition of Lyrical Ballads published.

1802 Much lyrical poetry composed.

April: Publication of further edition of Lyrical Ballads, with revised Preface.

August: Peace of Amiens enables W and DW to visit Annette and Caroline.

4 October: Marries Mary Hutchinson (1770–1859).

- 1803 War resumes and fear of invasion grows. Birth of first son, John.
Mid-August: W, DW and C begin tour of Scotland.
September: Meets Sir Walter Scott.
- 1804 Much composition, especially of The Prelude. 'Ode to Duty' and completion of 'Ode: Intimations of Immortality'. Daughter, Dorothy (always known as Dora), born.
- 1805 Brother John, b. 1772, drowned. The Prelude completed in thirteen books.
- 1806 Birth of son, Thomas. Visits London. The Wordsworths spend winter in a house of Sir George Beaumont at Coleorton, Leicestershire. C at last returns, much changed by ill-health. W reads The Prelude to him.
- 1807 Poems, in Two Volumes published. W staggered by critical abuse. Composes The White Doe of Rylstone, but does not publish it until 1815.
- 1808 Birth of daughter, Catherine. The Wordsworths leave Dove Cottage for Allan Bank, a larger house but still in Grasmere.
- 1809 Publishes The Convention of Cintra.
- 1810 Son, William, born. Misunderstanding leads to breach with C, not healed until 1812. First version of Guide to the Lakes published as anonymous Preface to Joseph Wilkinson's Select Views in Cumberland, Westmorland and Lancashire.
- 1811–12 Death of children, Thomas and Catherine. The Wordsworths move from Allan Bank to Rectory, Grasmere.
- 1813 Appointed Distributor of Stamps for Westmorland (a post in the revenue service). Moves to Rydal Mount, home for the rest of his life. Completes The Excursion.
- 1814 The Excursion published; the project of The Recluse announced in the Preface. Poem attacked by reviewers. Tour of Scotland.
- 1815 First collected edition of poems published, with new Preface. The White Doe of Rylstone published.
- 1816 Publishes prose Letter to a Friend of Robert Burns.

- 1817 C's Biographia Literaria published. Moves more widely in London circles; meets Keats.
- 1818 For the General Election campaigns energetically for the Tory interest in Westmorland, to the distress of family and many admirers.
- 1819 Publishes The Waggoner and Peter Bell, poems written long before in 1806 and 1798 respectively.
- 1820 Publishes The River Duddon sonnet sequence and a further collected works. Regular updating of his collected edition now becomes a feature of W's writing life. Tours Europe and revisits memorable places from the 1790 tour.
- 1822 Memorials of a Tour on the Continent, 1820 published and Ecclesiastical Sketches. First separate publication of Description of the Scenery of the Lakes (later published as Guide to the Lakes).
- 1829 Profoundly dismayed by Catholic Emancipation.
- 1831 September–October: Tours Scotland once more, and sees Sir Walter Scott (d. 1832) for the last time.
- 1832 Agitated by Reform Bill, enters period of greatly exaggerated alarm at the state of the country.
- 1834 25 July: Death of C.
- 1835 Yarrow Revisited published with prose 'Postscript' touching on politics, religion and art.
- 1837 Tours France and Italy.
- 1838 Sonnets collected as one volume.
- 1839 Conducts last of many revisions of The Prelude.
- 1842 Poems written in youth, notably The Borderers and 'Salisbury Plain', revised and published in Poems, Chiefly of Early and Late Years. Resigns Stamp Distributorship.
- 1843 Becomes Poet Laureate on death of Robert Southey.
- 1845 One-volume collected edition published.
- 1847 9 July: Deeply stricken by death of Dora.
- 1850 23 April: Dies. The Prelude published by his wife and executors.

Introduction

Wordsworth first had a poem published in 1787 when he was a schoolboy; the poem that opens this selection was published in 1798; the gap between these dates points to an apparent oddity that ought to be explained. It is that though the importance of the years 1790–1797 cannot be overstated – their importance, that is, to Wordsworth, who brooded over them throughout the most creative phase of his life, and to Wordsworthian scholars, who are fascinated by them still – poems from the period do not appear in this selection. Why not?

Between 1791 and 1792, when Wordsworth was in his early twenties and living in France, he embraced the promise of the 1789 Revolution that a new and finer era in human history was dawning, and when back in England he associated with radicals, declaring himself with pride one ‘of that odious class of men called democrats’ (letter, 23 May 1794).¹ In the years that followed the outbreak of war between France and Great Britain and her allies, however, Wordsworth was forced to register with increasingly perplexed dismay the course of events both at home and in France, which seemed not only to demonstrate that as they battled for survival the French were betraying the ideals of the fledgling republic but also to suggest that hope for the immediate amelioration of mankind anywhere was vain. Misery over politics, which Wordsworth shared with many other radicals during these tumultuous years, was compounded, moreover, by the private grief that in France he had fathered a daughter with a woman he had not married. That war had broken out shortly after his return to England meant that it was certain they would all be separated for an indefinite period.

During these years – roughly 1791 to 1797 – Wordsworth did write: two topographical poems in couplets, An Evening Walk and Descriptive

Sketches, two anti-war, anti-government polemics in Spenserian stanzas, the 'Salisbury Plain' poems, a rendering of Juvenal's Eighth Satire, and a tragedy in blank verse called The Borderers. A seditious prose apology for republicanism, A Letter to the Bishop of Llandaff, also survives. But although Wordsworth might be said to have been living poetically – experiencing, suffering, creating and procreating, surviving financially through a small bequest and the forbearance of friends – he was not yet living as a poet. All of the works just mentioned, save for the early descriptive ones, remained unpublished and not one of them is good enough to support Coleridge's contention in Biographia Literaria (1817) that Wordsworth stood 'nearest of all modern writers to Shakespeare and Milton; and yet in a kind perfectly unborrowed and his own.'

Towards the end of the decade all changed. Wordsworth took hold of his own destiny and, with a series of considered, but very high-risk decisions, began to shape his life as a poet: he chose to include a confessio fidei, 'Lines Written a few miles above Tintern Abbey' in the 1798 Lyrical Ballads; he chose to identify himself as Milton's heir when he announced to friends that he was embarking on a philosophic poem whose object, 'to convey most of the knowledge of which I am possessed', was so comprehensive that 'Indeed I know not any thing which will not come within the scope of my plan' (letter, 6 March 1798); and at the end of 1799 he chose to return to the region of the lakes, to live with his sister Dorothy, where he had been born and raised. These choices cumulatively placed Wordsworth, mentally and literally (that is, back among the mountains in Grasmere), where he could begin the work of taking possession of his life so far – and the wonderful thing is that this as-yet-barely-published poet's strategy for his life and art worked. His finest poems all date from 1797–8 onwards. From the second edition of Lyrical Ballads in 1800, which, unlike the first anonymous edition of 1798, carried Wordsworth's name alone on the title-page, and with new poems such as 'Michael' and the series celebrating Grasmere, 'Poems on the Naming of Places', the particular nature of Wordsworth's genius was manifest.

It is an irony of Wordsworth's creative life, however, that for much of it he worked in the conviction that his poetic destiny (and he saw it in such terms) was to be fulfilled otherwise than as it really was. The mid 1790s were a time of anguished soul-searching for Wordsworth, in which the effort to comprehend at the highest level the meaning of political and social events was inseparable from the more mundane but no less urgent search for a practicable way of life. The autobiographical poem The Prelude originates in Wordsworth's repeated attempts to discern an intelligible pattern in this period of his life. In a very difficult section of that poem, however, as Wordsworth struggles to convey to the poem's addressee, Coleridge, how near he had come to some sort of breakdown in the mid 1790s, the poet suggests that another time and another work might 'afford/Shapes livelier to convey to thee, my Friend,/What then I learned, or think I learned, of truth' (X, 879–81) and as co-visionary of The Recluse Coleridge would have recognized this as a pledge of the fuller moral-philosophical inquiry that they both envisaged as Wordsworth's life-work. And Wordsworth attempted to honour the pledge. After completing The Prelude in 1805 he returned to The Recluse, and in 1814, after years of labour as draft piled on draft, he published The Excursion, announced in the Preface as one part of The Recluse. In the event it was the only part of The Recluse he was ever to finish.

The Excursion, a quasi-dramatic poem in nine books of blank verse, is a substantial achievement, but it does not appear in this selection, partly because it resists the kind of representation through excerpts that serves well enough with The Prelude and partly because the verse is not so striking as to demand inclusion in a selection that offers many examples of Wordsworth's varying uses of blank verse. But a selection of Wordsworth without The Excursion is not the distortion and falsification a selection of Milton without Paradise Lost would be. For although Wordsworth undoubtedly needed to affirm his conception of himself as a poet through the challenge of a work of Miltonic ambition and scale, and although in the poem's reflections on the most troubled years of his past he did attempt to convey what then he learned or thought he learned of truth, the richest, most attractive embodiment of this search artistically is not found in the meditative and hortatory passages of The Excursion. It is found rather in all the poetry Wordsworth wrote from the late 1790s on – lyrics, sonnets, odes, the bulk of this Penguin selection – where what he had 'learned' was embodied in varied, dramatic, imaginative form, the kind of poetry he hymned in the 1802 version of the Preface to Lyrical Ballads as ‘the most philosophic of all writing’, truth ‘carried alive into the heart by passion’.

And it is found in The Prelude. This rich and complex work, which contains examples of all that is most compelling about Wordsworth's verse, encompasses many genres – it is epic, chronicle, rhapsody, hymn and prayer, and more. Originally thought of as preparatory to the great philosophical work, it is, in fact, Wordsworth's greatest achievement, the poem where, if anywhere, he does meet the stern obligations he had laid on himself as he conceived The Recluse. So it is fitting that it should conclude with a fond recollection of the period in which the philosophical poem was first contemplated. Over the year 1797–8 Wordsworth and Coleridge lived very close together under the Quantock Hills in Somerset. Each admired the other passionately, perhaps extravagantly, and it was fitting that the year culminated in a joint production, the anonymously issued Lyrical Ballads of 1798. But what mattered most for Wordsworth, as he saw very clearly in recollection, was that then, as he and Coleridge ‘Together wantoned in wild Poesy’ (XIII, 414), Wordsworth strode beyond youthful work in rhyming couplets and Spenserian stanzas and began to write with a cadence ‘perfectly unborrowed and his own’. This is why this selection begins where it does.

In old age Wordsworth was perhaps entitled to sum up. The following poem, ‘Glad sight wherever new with old’, written in 1842 when he was seventy-two, points to almost everything that has been central to his long imaginative engagement with words and things.

Glad sight wherever new with old
Is joined through some dear homeborn tie;
The life of all that we behold
Depends upon that mystery.
Vain is the glory of the sky,
The beauty vain of field and grove
Unless, while with admiring eye
We gaze, we also learn to love.

‘Glad sight.’ In an 1874 essay, later collected in Appreciations (1889), the critic Walter Pater declared Wordsworth to be the poet of ‘impassioned contemplation’, and in stressing both words equally he got the balance exactly right. In his own attempts to characterize the nature of the poetic or creative power, Wordsworth laid similar emphasis on impassioned seeing. One of the chief qualities of the poet, he says in the 1802 version of the Preface to Lyrical Ballads, is that his rejoicing ‘in the spirit of life that is in him’ moves him to ‘contemplate similar volitions and passions as manifested in the goings-on of the Universe. The conjunction of the simple and the infinite – ‘goings-on’, ‘Universe’ – is as characteristically Wordsworthian as the breathtaking assertion that follows, namely that if the Universe lets him down in manifesting volitions and passions, the poet is ‘habitually impelled to create them where he does not find them.’ In the meditation on creativity which is the climax to The Prelude, dense but vital lines return us to the formulation in the Preface to Lyrical Ballads. Poets (and the word is not limited to those who actually write poems) are ever on the watch,

Willing to work and to be wrought upon.
They need not extraordinary calls
To rouse them, in a world of life they live...
(XIII, 99–102)

‘Ever on the watch’ but ‘Willing to work’ – this reciprocal energy prompted by the ‘not extraordinary’ (the elaborated negative is a favoured Wordsworth tool for honing precision, as is the demand made through the rhythm that every syllable of a key word, here ‘extraordinary’, be voiced) is the drive of much of Wordsworth’s finest poetry. This selection opens with a ‘Sketch’, its subject an old man not worth noticing. The second poem, ‘The Ruined Cottage’, is built upon the disparity between what the poet-narrator sees and what the pedlar-sage more deeply sees. As he concludes his tale about Margaret’s suffering and death, the pedlar insists that the poet must ‘no longer read/ The forms of things with an unworthy eye.’

To ‘read’ worthily does not mean discarding the ‘forms of things’ – exactly not. ‘For it is with this world, as starting point and basis alike, that we shall always have to concern ourselves: the world is not to be learned and thrown aside, but reverted to and relearned.' The words are Robert Browning's, but they apply as fitly to Lyrical Ballads and Poems, in Two Volumes as to Browning's own volume of 1855, Men and Women. In poems which record an encounter with his fellow men, 'Simon Lee', 'Beggars', 'Stepping Westward', or with a plant or creature, 'To a Butterfly', 'To the Cuckoo', or with a place, 'Composed Upon Westminster Bridge', Wordsworth learns and relearns.

What a poem must do is excite in the reader a sense of this activity, which involves intellect, feeling, memory and imagination, and Wordsworth does not always succeed. When his sister-in-law Sara Hutchinson read 'The Leech Gatherer' (a first version of 'Resolution and Independence') in manuscript and found it unpersuasive, Wordsworth's initial reaction was to hector her about rightly seeing: 'though I believe God has given me a strong imagination, I cannot conceive a figure more impressive than that of an old Man like this' (letter, 14 June 1802). His next and better response was to revise the poem for eventual publication in Poems, in Two Volumes (1807), to make the language work harder. On occasions Wordsworth seems to have trusted too readily that what Coleridge termed (with serious reservations about his friend's practice) 'a daring Humbleness of Language & Versification' (letter, 29 July 1802) would inevitably startle and rouse readers to a new level of attentiveness, but at his best, what Wordsworth sees 'ever on the watch', and how he sees it, is conveyed through language of captivating power – inventive, surprising, always hinting at abundant resources in reserve.

'The life of all that we behold/Depends upon that mystery.' From 'Old Man Travelling' (1797) to 'I know an aged Man' (1846), Wordsworth's poetry celebrates life's mystery incarnate in the commonplace. 'Michael' and 'The Brothers', he told the statesman Charles James Fox, 'were written with a view to shew that men who do not wear fine cloaths can feel deeply' (letter, 14 January 1801). Wordsworth was particularly tender towards 'The Idiot Boy' and remained so throughout his life. When in 1802 a new acquaintance, John Wilson, told him that though he admired Lyrical Ballads in general he could not stomach this poem, it was hardly surprising that Wordsworth should have been moved to eloquence about the poet's responsibility towards challenging subject matter (see letter, 7 April 1802), for Wordsworth was still very close to a moment of composition undertaken, he recalled many years later, with great ‘glee’. But it is perhaps surprising that thirty years later Wordsworth should still be regarding this poem from Lyrical Ballads (1798) as a touchstone of his achievement. By then what many of Wordsworth's admirers most relished was the elevated tone of many of his later poems (see my Wordsworth and the Victorians, 1998), but for Wordsworth, as he makes clear in a letter of 13 June 1831, ‘The Idiot Boy’ remained a litmus test of a reader's willingness to shed the kinds of preconceptions about poetry and life which set up resistance to imaginative engagement with both. A line from another poem of the same vintage, ‘The Old Cumberland Beggar’, continued to serve as Wordsworth's motto. ‘If my writings are to last,’ he told Henry Crabb Robinson in 1835, ‘it will I myself believe, be mainly owing to this characteristic. They will please for the single cause, That we have all of us one human heart!’ (letter, c. 27 April).

In The Prelude, when Wordsworth dramatizes the discovery of his mission, what he hymns as ‘the life/In common things’ (I, 117–18) is always to the fore, especially strikingly at two defining moments. The first is when he registers a sense of dedication as he walks at daybreak, enraptured by all the sweetness of a common dawn,

Dews, vapours, and the melody of birds,
And Labourers going forth into the fields.
(IV, 337–39)

The second is in France, when his newly made friend Michel Beaupuy, an ardent supporter of the revolution, points to a hunger-bitten girl and exclaims, “‘Tis against that/Which we are fighting” (IX, 519–20). So impelled, Wordsworth declares, my heart was all

Given to the people, and my love was theirs.
(IX, 125–6)

Beaupuy was a soldier whose duty in 1791 was plain before him. Wordsworth's path did not become clear until the end of the decade. But when he announced in the Preface to Lyrical Ballads (1800) that he had deliberately chosen 'low and rustic life' for a body of poetry whose object was to 'interest mankind permanently, and not unimportant in the multiplicity, and in the quality of its moral relations', he was consciously uniting his present deliberate assumption of the role of Poet with his earlier life, when his vivid but inchoate experience was laying down what in 'Tintern Abbey' he calls 'life and food for future years'. In the only way he could, that is as a poet, Wordsworth tried from Lyrical Ballads onwards to keep faith with Beaupuy and the hunger-bitten girl.

'Is joined through some dear homeborn tie.' Joining past and present was clearly vital to Wordsworth if he was to sustain the creative drive begun in 1798–9. It was vital because what he had declared then, by his actions, by Lyrical Ballads and most overtly by pugnacious manifestos, the Prefaces of 1800 and 1802, was that his return to the Lake District did not signify defeat. It might have looked like it, as Wordsworth withdrew further from London or any other centre of political activity, and he could have been forgiven for retreating. By the end of 1799 William Pitt's government had complete control of domestic radicalism, and what little optimism die-hard radicals retained was further eroded as the French armies began to realize Napoleon's dreams of conquest.

But to Wordsworth the return to the mountains was emphatically not retreat. Collapse of faith in the French Revolution did not entail loss of faith in man, but rather a renewed exploration of what it might mean to say that one still had 'faith in man' and in what he hymns at the ringing close to one of his 1802 sonnets as 'Man's unconquerable mind' ('To Toussaint L'Ouverture'). At the end of the autobiographical retrospect worked over in 1798–1800 (now generally known as The Two-Part Prelude), he sharply distinguishes himself and Coleridge from those who 'in this time of fear/This melancholy waste of hopes o'erthrown' (II, 479–80), have abandoned all hope of Man:

if in this time

Of dereliction and dismay, I yet

Despair not of our Nature, but retain
A more than Roman confidence, a faith
That fails not, in all sorrow my support,
The blessing of my life, the gift is yours
Ye mountains, thine O Nature. Thou hast fed
My lofty speculations, and in thee
For this uneasy heart of ours I find
A never-failing principle of joy
And purest passion.

This is a very remarkable declaration of faith and like all faith not easy to convey for someone else to apprehend. But as a conviction – and in The Prelude Wordsworth dramatically and forcefully contrasts this word, ‘conviction’ with ‘proof’ (see the whole of Book X, but especially 879–904) as the ground on which one must build one's life – it is the basis of all of Wordsworth's mature work. In the Prefaces to Lyrical Ballads 1800 and 1802 a similar conjunction is made between the poet's assessment that the present is peculiarly barren and his conviction that redemption must begin with a new vision of Man, a recognition of fundamentals, ‘the great and simple affections of our nature’, ‘the primary laws of our nature’, as these are embodied in the daily experience of men and women who live ‘incorporated with the beautiful and permanent forms of nature.’

Much of the finest poetry Wordsworth wrote affirms and validates both choices made in 1799: the choice of life (the Poet's) and of location (Grasmere, in the Lake District where he was born and went to school), and it ties together past and present by confirming that all that Wordsworth had experienced earlier was a preparation for all that he would do after he returned to his native mountains. Grasmere is not a dislocation, a new start in which the poet severs himself from years of error, but a place of renewal in which the meaning of these years becomes apparent and, in poetry, is made manifest.

From this perspective there is a connection between the Wordsworth who declared himself a democrat in 1794 and the poet of ‘The Solitary Reaper’ in 1805. How it evolved is what The Prelude is dedicated to tracing, and it is a striking indication of how complex the task is that Wordsworth's search into past time expands from two to five to thirteen books.² But the impulse to connect stemmed from something far deeper in Wordsworth than the need to maintain that there was a continuum between his poetry and his politics. Wordsworth's profoundest need was to know that nothing that had ever given him joy was lost: not the loud dry wind whistling around him when a schoolboy as he clung to a crag; not the sight of a Highland girl by Loch Katrine; not a story told to him at Ann Tyson's fireside of shepherds such as Michael; not a line of poetry, no matter how obscure the source. And above all, nothing of the kind of human love which calls forth in 'Home at Grasmere' (104–116) as beautiful a tribute as one human being could pay to another.

In one passage not eventually included in 'Michael', Wordsworth hymns powers by which, resistant to every change

Which years can bring into the human heart
Our feelings are indissolubly bound
Together, and affinities preserved
Between all stages of the life of man.³

The 'spots of time' in The Prelude, Book XI, 257–388, assert in some of the poem's most powerful verse the restorative power of such indissolubility and the role of memory in preserving it. The passages begin,

There are in our existence spots of time
Which with distinct pre-eminence retain
A renovating Virtue...

and readers quite new to Wordsworth might find it useful to begin here (page 271 below), for these two scenes and the meditative lines in which they are set lead into the whole of the rest of Wordsworth's oeuvre: 'Home at Grasmere'; the lyrics of 1802 that celebrate rural life, people and places; the poems from the Scottish tours of 1803 and 1814; and above all The Prelude itself.

One passage (II, 170–80) may stand for the many such in the poem. The schoolboys are returning home after a day playing on the eastern shore of Windermere:

But ere the fall
Of night, when in our pinnace we returned
Over the dusky Lake, and to the beach
Of some small Island steered our course with one
The Minstrel of our troop, and left him there,
And rowed off gently, while he blew his flute
Alone upon the rock, Oh! then the calm
And dead still water lay upon my mind
Even with a weight of pleasure, and the sky
Never before so beautiful, sank down
Into my heart, and held me like a dream.

Everything that makes Wordsworth's poetry at its best so absorbing is in play here. But what is to be emphasized is that the intensity of feeling which irradiates the memory of the scene stems from the poet's determination to register the fullness of an experience which though long ago still provides – and he hopes will continue to provide – mysteriously, nourishment for the imagination and the heart.

There is, however, a shadow over such imaginative acts of recovery: the one cast by intimations of inevitable loss. Within the crucial 'spots of time' sequence itself, where memory's role as a redemptive agent is most gratefully acknowledged, a transition passage written six years after the original composition introduces such anxieties as a fear of the lessening of power:

The days gone by
Come back upon me from the dawn almost
Of life: the hiding-places of my power
Seem open; I approach, and then they close;
I see by glimpses now; when age comes on,

May scarcely see at all, and I would give,
While yet we may, as far as words can give,
A substance and a life to what I feel:
I would enshrine the spirit of the past
For future restoration.
(XI, 334–342)

Other lyric poems face the certainty of loss with a heroic determination to fully relish residual compensations. The balance of ‘such loss’ with ‘abundant recompense’ is deployed as early as ‘Tintern Abbey’ in 1798, but here so triumphant is the poem’s ‘impassioned music’ (as Wordsworth termed it in a note to ‘Tintern Abbey’ in Lyrical Ballads (1800)) that the note of sadness is drowned out. Not so in poems such as the ‘Ode: Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood’, ‘Elegiac Stanzas’ or ‘Composed Upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty’, where the language of ebullient hopefulness, ‘O joy! that in our embers/Is something that doth live’, in the first of these poems (1804) shades into that of fortitude and eventually of acceptance in the last (1817). But even the sadness of acceptance is not defeat. Each of these poems – and they are among Wordsworth’s most highly-wrought – is a triumph, a creation that subdues loss by realizing its poetic potential. There is nothing airy-fairy about this. Wordsworth lost both his parents in childhood; he lost his brother, drowned, aged 33; two of his children died within months of each another. By middle age Wordsworth knew about loss. But it was one of his strengths as a poet that from early on he commanded the language for conveying it, recording it, coping with it. As witness that he continued to command it, see the very poignant late poem, ‘Extempore Effusion Upon the Death of James Hogg’.

‘Unless, while with admiring eye/We gaze, we also learn to love.’ A word-search across Wordsworth’s whole output reveals how important the word ‘love’ is. It is the key word on which the tragic poem ‘Michael’ turns:

There is a comfort in the strength of love;
‘Twill make a thing endurable, which else

Would break the heart...

(458–9)

An epiphanic sight stops the whirligig of London for a moment as Wordsworth watches a labourer with a sick baby on his knee:

Of those who passed, and me who looked at him,

He took no note; but in his brawny Arms

...

He held the Child, and, bending over it

As if he were afraid both of the sun

And of the air which he had come to seek,

He eyed it with unutterable love.

(The Prelude, VIII, 852–9)

Wordsworth favoured the combination of those last two words. A surrogate self created in 1798, the Pedlar/Wanderer, who becomes one of the principal figures in The Excursion, reads in the sun-drenched clouds ‘unutterable love’ (The Excursion, I, 205). Towards the end of The Prelude an attempt is made to marshal all the concepts and ideas thrown up in the poem's inquiry into the growth of a poet's mind:

From love, for here

Do we begin and end, all grandeur comes,

All truth and beauty, from pervading love,

That gone, we are as dust.

(XIII, 149–52)

In his remonstrance to John Wilson already mentioned, Wordsworth grounds his estimation of human potential in what he terms ‘the strength, disinterestedness, and grandeur of love’.

Many more examples could be given and, however diverse, all would be entry points towards the core of Wordsworth's poetry. It is not, however, the emphasis upon Love in itself that is striking in his work as a whole, but Wordsworth's insistence that the capacity to love is a process – that is, that one learns to love – and that the process is inextricably linked to one's openness to beauty in the world around one.

Very late in life Wordsworth – who had enjoyed using a botanical microscope for forty years – observed:

Admiration & love, to which all knowledge truly vital must tend, are felt by men of real genius in proportion as their discoveries in Natural Philosophy are enlarged; and the beauty in form of a plant or an animal is not made less but more apparent as whole by a more accurate insight into its constituent properties & powers.

(Fenwick Note to 'This Lawn')

The coupling 'Admiration and Love' is one used repeatedly: at the opening of The Prelude – 'I spare to speak, my Friend, of what ensued – The admiration and the love –' (I, 116-17); in lines written for The Prelude but eventually incorporated with some revision into The Excursion, VII, 763ff.:

We live by admiration and by love
And even as these are well and wisely fixed,
In dignity of being we ascend.

Where perhaps one might not expect it, in the course of a polemic about government policy in the war against Napoleon, Wordsworth anchors part of his argument on this as first principle: 'Love and admiration must push themselves out towards some quarter: otherwise the moral man is killed' (The Convention of Cintra, 1809).

It is a dynamic coupling. Admiration – to be distinguished from 'Wonder', which Wordsworth claims to be 'the natural produce of ignorance' (Essay Supplementary to the Preface, 1815) – calls into play imagination, knowledge, sympathy and delight. Early in his career Wordsworth attempted to explain with linguistic precision just exactly how admiration nourished love, using the concepts and terminology of eighteenth-century philosophy and psychology (see lines beginning 'Not Useless do I deem'⁴). Later poems, notably The Prelude, dramatize the impossibility of doing any such thing: – 'Oh mystery of Man, from what a depth/Proceed thy honours!' (XI, 329–30) is the note of a poem which celebrates the complexity of the fashioning of the mind and soul. And at the end of his life, in 'Glad Sight', Wordsworth was content to reaffirm what he knew could not be proved, but on which all his poetry was grounded: 'we live by admiration and by love'.

The best place to end an introduction to Wordsworth is with Coleridge. In this passage from Chapter 14 of Biographia Literaria Coleridge purports to be recalling his fellow-poet's intentions in Lyrical Ballads, but in reality he was drawing on almost twenty years' knowledge of Wordsworth's poetry since then, as he suggests, in language as beautiful as its object, just where its strength lies. It lies, he says, in its power of awakening the mind's attention from the lethargy of custom, and directing it to the loveliness and the wonders of the world before us; an inexhaustible treasure, but for which in consequence of the film of familiarity and selfish solicitude we have eyes, yet see not, ears that hear not, and hearts that neither feel nor understand.

NOTES

1.

Information about sources and context will be found at the beginning of the Notes and in the introductory note to each poem in this selection. Excerpts from the thirteen-book The Prelude are introduced by a note placing the excerpt in the context of the book itself and of the poem as a whole.

2.

The process of rethinking and revision did not stop in 1805. W continued to revise The Prelude off and on until 1839. In a letter of 3 June 1805, however, he reported to Sir George Beaumont, 'I finished my Poem about a fortnight ago', a statement which authorizes criticism to regard the thirteen-book Prelude of 1805 as a discrete, completed work.

3.

See Lyrical Ballads, and Other Poems, 1797–1800, ed. James Butler and Karen Green (1992), p. 328.

4.

In The Ruined Cottage and The Pedlar, ed. James Butler (1979), pp. 372–5.

Further Reading

EDITIONS

Wordsworth's poetry is being edited in full in the ongoing (1975–) Cornell Wordsworth Series, general editor: Stephen Parrish. For readers who want the poems presented in the classifications of the final authorized edition of 1849–50, the five-volume Poetical Works, edited by Ernest de Selincourt and Helen Darbishire (1941–9; rev. 1952–9), remains standard.

For scholarly purposes the Cornell editions of the 1799, 1805 and 1850 texts of The Prelude, edited respectively by Stephen Parrish (1977), Mark L. Reed (1991) and W.J. B. Owen (1985), wholly supersede the earlier standard edition by de Selincourt and Darbishire (1926; rev. 1959). Other scholarly editions of The Prelude in its many versions are the Norton, edited by Jonathan Wordsworth, M. H. Abrams and Stephen Gill (1979), and the Penguin, edited by Jonathan Wordsworth (1995).

Wordsworth's prose writings have been edited by W. J. B. Owen and Jane Worthington Smyser, 3 vols. (1974), and the very important 'Fenwick Notes', not included in Owen and Smyser, have been edited by Jared Curtis (1993). The Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth, 8 vols. (1967–93), have been edited by Chester L. Shaver, Mary Moorman and, for the latter 4 volumes, Alan G. Hill.

BIOGRAPHY, BIBLIOGRAPHY, SCHOLARLY AIDS

Wordsworth's life has been the subject of recent studies by Stephen Gill (1989), Kenneth Johnston (1998), Juliet Barker (2000) and Duncan Wu (2001). Gill's is currently the standard account of the whole career, Barker's the fullest presentation of the Wordsworth domestic circle. Mark L. Reed's two volumes of Wordsworthian Chronology 1770–1815 (1967; 1975) are indispensable to advanced study, as are Duncan Wu's two volumes on Wordsworth's reading up to 1815 (1993; 1995). The Cambridge Companion to Wordsworth, edited by Stephen Gill (2003), offers ways into the poet's whole body of work and its Guide to Further Reading by Keith Hanley will be found as full as is compatible with usefulness. Nicholas Roe's Wordsworth contribution in Romanticism: A Bibliographical Guide, edited by Michael O'Neill (1998), is also very useful.

CRITICAL AND SCHOLARLY BOOKS

Robert Woof's annotated collection of Wordsworth criticism 1793–1820, in the Critical Heritage series (2002), is especially valuable because in addition to formal critical essays and reviews it includes excerpts from letters and diaries. The surveys by Hanley and Roe, mentioned above, cover criticism and scholarship since Wordsworth's death, and Stephen Gill's Wordsworth and the Victorians (1998) deals fully with significant works of the late nineteenth century. It is the view of this editor that reading lists of Wordsworth criticism ought always to begin with Samuel Taylor Coleridge's Biographia Literaria (1817) and Matthew Arnold's introduction to his selection of Wordsworth's poems (1879), but it is difficult to know how to select from later scholarship and criticism. It is fair to say that criticism since Geoffrey H. Hartman's landmark Wordsworth's Poetry 1787–1814 (1964) is most likely to be of interest to a reader coming fresh to Wordsworth now. For guidance on the large amount of valuable work to be found in periodicals and in contributions to collections of essays on the Romantic period, the help of Roe and Hanley must be sought. From the mass of post-Hartman full-length studies on Wordsworth's work as a whole, the following are of undoubted interest and/or importance: M. H. Abrams, Natural Supernaturalism: Tradition and Revolution in Romantic Literature (1971); Mary Jacobus, Tradition and Experiment in Wordsworth's Lyrical Ballads, 1798 (1976); Thomas McFarland, Romanticism and the Forms of Ruin: Wordsworth, Coleridge, and Modalities of Fragmentation (1981); Jonathan Wordsworth, William Wordsworth: The Borders of Vision (1982); Kenneth R. Johnston, Wordsworth and 'The Recluse' (1984); James K. Chandler, Wordsworth's Second Nature: A Study of the Poetry and the Politics (1984); Lucy Newlyn, Coleridge, Wordsworth and the Language of Allusion (1986); Nicholas Roe, Wordsworth and Coleridge: The Radical Years (1988); Paul Magnuson, Coleridge and Wordsworth: A Lyrical Dialogue (1988); Jonathan Bate, Romantic Ecology: Wordsworth and the Environmental Tradition (1991); Judith W. Page, Wordsworth and the Cultivation of Women (1994); David Bromwich, Disowned by Memory: Wordsworth's Poetry of the 1790s (1998).

A Note on the Texts

Wordsworth was a persistent reviser of his texts both before and after publication. After 1815 each successive issue of his collected works was subject to minute attention until he oversaw a final edition in 1849–50. The significance of these dates is this: in some cases a poet in his very late seventies, Poet Laureate from 1843, is revising poems he wrote fifty years earlier, when he was a radical with republican leanings, and in some cases, unsurprisingly, the late revisions considerably change, even distort, the earlier version of the text.

Faced with deciding on textual authority and integrity, editors have responded in one of three ways: (1) by printing the 1849–50 text as the last authorized lifetime edition; (2) by printing texts as far as possible in the form in which they were first published in volume form; (3) by printing texts chosen from across the chronological sweep of the editions in Wordsworth's lifetime as, in the editor's judgement, the best texts as art. This was Matthew Arnold's favoured practice, but no other serious editor has ever had the Arnoldian self-confidence required to do it again.

This selection follows (2). The text of the poems is taken (typographical slips etc. tidied up) from their first appearance in Wordsworth's principal editions: Lyrical Ballads (1798); Lyrical Ballads, 2 vols. (1800) (further issues followed in 1802, 1805); Poems, in Two Volumes, 2 vols. (1807); Poems, 2 vols. (1815); Miscellaneous Poems, 4 vols. (1820); Yarrow Revisited (1835). Any exception to this practice is signalled in the notes to the poems. The order in which the poems are presented corresponds to the chronology of their composition and for information about that I have relied on the work of Mark L. Reed and of the editors of the Cornell Wordsworth volumes (see Further Reading for details).

The Prelude is a special case. Wordsworth did not publish the poem, leaving the task to his widow and executors in 1850. He did, however, prepare a text in fourteen books for posthumous publication. This text was the latest of a number of revisions to a version in thirteen books completed in 1805. Wordsworth declared his autobiographical poem ‘finished’ (letter 3 June 1805) at that date and it is this version of the poem which provides the extracts chosen here. The Prelude was composed over so many years, however, that it would be misleading to place this large body of work at any given point within the sequence of shorter lyric poems. Excerpts from it are accordingly placed as a discrete cluster at the end of the chronological sequence.

[] means that the manuscript is incomplete at this point; [word] means that words have been supplied from another manuscript.

Selected Poems

Old Man Travelling
Animal Tranquillity and Decay, A Sketch

The little hedge-row birds,

That peck along the road, regard him not.
He travels on, and in his face, his step,
His gait, is one expression; every limb,
His look and bending figure, all bespeak
A man who does not move with pain, but moves
With thought – He is insensibly subdued
To settled quiet: he is one by whom
All effort seems forgotten, one to whom 10 Long patience has such mild composure given,
That patience now doth seem a thing, of which He hath no need. He is by nature led
To peace so perfect, that the young behold
With envy, what the old man hardly feels.
– I asked him whither he was bound, and what
The object of his journey; he replied ‘Sir! I am going many miles to take A last leave of my son, a mariner,
Who from a sea-fight has been brought to Falmouth, 20 And there is dying in an hospital.’

The Ruined Cottage

'Twas summer and the sun was mounted high.
Along the south the uplands feebly glared
Through a pale steam, and all the northern downs
In clearer air ascending shewed far off
Their surfaces with shadows dappled o'er
Of deep embattled clouds: far as the sight
Could reach those many shadows lay in spots
Determined and unmoved, with steady beams
Of clear and pleasant sunshine interposed;
10 Pleasant to him who on the soft cool moss
Extends his careless limbs beside the root
Of some huge oak whose aged branches make
A twilight of their own, a dewy shade
Where the wren warbles while the dreaming man,
Half-conscious of that soothing melody,
With side-long eye looks out upon the scene,
By those impending branches made more soft,
More soft and distant. Other lot was mine.
Across a bare wide Common I had toiled
20 With languid feet which by the slipp'ry ground
Were baffled still, and when I stretched myself
On the brown earth my limbs from very heat
Could find no rest nor my weak arm disperse
The insect host which gathered round my face
And joined their murmurs to the tedious noise
Of seeds of bursting gorse that crackled round.
I rose and turned towards a group of trees
Which midway in that level stood alone,

And thither come at length, beneath a shade
30 Of clustering elms that sprang from the same root
I found a ruined house, four naked walls
That stared upon each other. I looked round
And near the door I saw an aged Man,
Alone, and stretched upon the cottage bench;
An iron-pointed staff lay at his side.
With instantaneous joy I recognized
That pride of nature and of lowly life,
The venerable Armytage, a friend
As dear to me as is the setting sun.
40

Two days before

We had been fellow-travellers. I knew
That he was in this neighbourhood and now
Delighted found him here in the cool shade.
He lay, his pack of rustic merchandize
Pillowing his head – I guess he had no thought
Of his way-wandering life. His eyes were shut;
The shadows of the breezy elms above
Dappled his face. With thirsty heat oppressed
At length I hailed him, glad to see his hat
50 Bedewed with water-drops, as if the brim
Had newly scooped a running stream. He rose
And pointing to a sun-flower bade me climb
The [] wall where that same gaudy flower
Looked out upon the road. It was a plot
Of garden-ground, now wild, its matted weeds
Marked with the steps of those whom as they passed,
The goose-berry trees that shot in long lank slips,
Or currants hanging from their leafless stems
In scanty strings, had tempted to o'erleap 60 The broken wall. Within that cheerless spot,
Where two tall hedgerows of thick willow boughs
Joined in a damp cold nook, I found a well

Half-choked [with willow flowers and weeds.]
I slaked my thirst and to the shady bench
Returned, and while I stood unbonneted
To catch the motion of the cooler air
The old Man said, 'I see around me here
Things which you cannot see: we die, my Friend,
Nor we alone, but that which each man loved
70 And prized in his peculiar nook of earth
Dies with him or is changed, and very soon
Even of the good is no memorial left.
The Poets in their elegies and songs
Lamenting the departed call the groves,
They call upon the hills and streams to mourn,
And senseless rocks, nor idly; for they speak
In these their invocations with a voice
Obedient to the strong creative power
Of human passion. Sympathies there are 80 More tranquil, yet perhaps of kindred birth,
That steal upon the meditative mind
And grow with thought. Beside yon spring I stood
And eyed its waters till we seemed to feel
One sadness, they and I. For them a bond
Of brotherhood is broken: time has been
When every day the touch of human hand
Disturbed their stillness, and they ministered
To human comfort. When I stooped to drink,
A spider's web hung to the water's edge,
90 And on the wet and slimy foot-stone lay
The useless fragment of a wooden bowl;
It moved my very heart. The day has been
When I could never pass this road but she
Who lived within these walls, when I appeared,
A daughter's welcome gave me, and I loved her
As my own child. O Sir! the good die first,
And they whose hearts are dry as summer dust

Burn to the socket. Many a passenger
Has blessed poor Margaret for her gentle looks 100 When she upheld the cool refreshment drawn
From that forsaken spring, and no one came
But he was welcome, no one went away
But that it seemed she loved him. She is dead,
The worm is on her cheek, and this poor hut,
Stripped of its outward garb of household flowers,
Of rose and sweet-briar, offers to the wind
A cold bare wall whose earthy top is tricked
With weeds and the rank spear-grass. She is dead,
And nettles rot and adders sun themselves
110 Where we have sate together while she nursed
Her infant at her breast. The unshod Colt,
The wandring heifer and the Potter's ass,
Find shelter now within the chimney-wall
Where I have seen her evening hearth-stone blaze
And through the window spread upon the road
Its chearful light. – You will forgive me, Sir,
But often on this cottage do I muse
As on a picture, till my wiser mind
Sinks, yielding to the foolishness of grief.
120

She had a husband, an industrious man,

Sober and steady; I have heard her say
That he was up and busy at his loom
In summer ere the mower's scythe had swept
The dewy grass, and in the early spring
Ere the last star had vanished. They who passed
At evening, from behind the garden-fence
Might hear his busy spade, which he would ply
After his daily work till the day-light
Was gone and every leaf and flower were lost
130 In the dark hedges. So they passed their days

In peace and comfort, and two pretty babes
Were their best hope next to the God in Heaven.
– You may remember, now some ten years gone,
Two blighting seasons when the fields were left
With half a harvest. It pleased heaven to add
A worse affliction in the plague of war:
A happy land was stricken to the heart;
'Twas a sad time of sorrow and distress:
A wanderer among the cottages,
140 I with my pack of winter raiment saw
The hardships of that season: many rich
Sunk down as in a dream among the poor,
And of the poor did many cease to be,
And their place knew them not. Meanwhile, abridged
Of daily comforts gladly reconciled
To numerous self-denials, Margaret
Went struggling on through those calamitous years
With chearful hope: but ere the second autumn
A fever seized her husband. In disease
150 He lingered long, and when his strength returned
He found the little he had stored to meet
The hour of accident or crippling age
Was all consumed. As I have said, 'twas now
A time of trouble; shoals of artisans
Were from their daily labour turned away
To hang for bread on parish charity,
They and their wives and children – happier far
Could they have lived as do the little birds
That peck along the hedges or the kite
160 That makes her dwelling in the mountain rocks.
Ill fared it now with Robert, he who dwelt
In this poor cottage; at his door he stood
And whistled many a snatch of merry tunes
That had no mirth in them, or with his knife
Carved uncouth figures on the heads of sticks,

Then idly sought about through every nook
Of house or garden any casual task
Of use or ornament, and with a strange,
Amusing but uneasy novelty
170 He blended where he might the various tasks
Of summer, autumn, winter, and of spring.
But this endured not; his good-humour soon Became a weight in which no pleasure was,
And poverty brought on a petted mood
And a sore temper: day by day he drooped,
And he would leave his home, and to the town
Without an errand would he turn his steps
Or wander here and there among the fields.
One while he would speak lightly of his babes
180 And with a cruel tongue: at other times
He played with them wild freaks of merriment:
And 'twas a piteous thing to see the looks
Of the poor innocent children. "Every smile,"
Said Margaret to me here beneath these trees,
"Made my heart bleed." At this the old Man paused
And looking up to those enormous elms
He said, 'Tis now the hour of deepest noon.
At this still season of repose and peace,
This hour when all things which are not at rest
190 Are chearful, while this multitude of flies
Fills all the air with happy melody,
Why should a tear be in an old man's eye?
Why should we thus with an untoward mind
And in the weakness of humanity
From natural wisdom turn our hearts away,
To natural comfort shut our eyes and ears,
And feeding on disquiet thus disturb
The calm of Nature with our restless thoughts?'

Second Part

He spake with somewhat of a solemn tone:
200 But when he ended there was in his face
Such easy cheerfulness, a look so mild
That for a little time it stole away
All recollection, and that simple tale
Passed from my mind like a forgotten sound.
A while on trivial things we held discourse,
To me soon tasteless. In my own despite
I thought of that poor woman as of one
Whom I had known and loved. He had rehearsed
Her homely tale with such familiar power,
210 With such a[n active] countenance, an eye
So busy, that the things of which he spake
Seemed present, and, attention now relaxed,
There was a heartfelt chillness in my veins.
I rose, and turning from that breezy shade
Went out into the open air and stood
To drink the comfort of the warmer sun.
Long time I had not stayed ere, looking round
Upon that tranquil ruin, I returned
And begged of the old man that for my sake 220 He would resume his story. He replied,
'It were a wantonness and would demand
Severe reproof, if we were men whose hearts
Could hold vain dalliance with the misery
Even of the dead, contented thence to draw
A momentary pleasure never marked
By reason, barren of all future good.

But we have known that there is often found
In mournful thoughts, and always might be found,
A power to virtue friendly; were't not so,
230 I am a dreamer among men, indeed
An idle dreamer. 'Tis a common tale,
By moving accidents uncharactered,
A tale of silent suffering, hardly clothed
In bodily form, and to the grosser sense
But ill adapted, scarcely palpable
To him who does not think. But at your bidding
I will proceed.

While thus it fared with them

To whom this cottage till that hapless year
Had been a blessed home, it was my chance 240 To travel in a country far remote.
And glad I was when, halting by yon gate
That leads from the green lane, again I saw
These lofty elm-trees. Long I did not rest.
With many pleasant thoughts I cheered my way
O'er the flat common. At the door arrived,
I knocked, and when I entered with the hope
Of usual greeting, Margaret looked at me
A little while, then turned her head away
Speechless, and sitting down upon a chair
250 Wept bitterly. I wist not what to do
Or how to speak to her. Poor wretch! at last
She rose from off her seat – and then, oh Sir!
I cannot tell how she pronounced my name:
With fervent love, and with a face of grief
Unutterably helpless, and a look
That seemed to cling upon me, she enquired
If I had seen her husband. As she spake
A strange surprize and fear came to my heart,
Nor had I power to answer ere she told

260 That he had disappeared – just two months gone.
He left his house; two wretched days had passed,
And on the third by the first break of light,
Within her casement full in view she saw
A purse of gold. “I trembled at the sight,”
Said Margaret, “for I knew it was his hand
That placed it there, and on that very day
By one, a stranger, from my husband sent,
The tidings came that he had joined a troop
Of soldiers going to a distant land.

270 He left me thus – Poor Man! he had not heart
To take a farewell of me, and he feared
That I should follow with my babes, and sink
Beneath the misery of a soldier's life.”
This tale did Margaret tell with many tears:
And when she ended I had little power
To give her comfort, and was glad to take Such words of hope from her own mouth as served
To cheer us both: but long we had not talked
Ere we built up a pile of better thoughts,
280 And with a brighter eye she looked around
As if she had been shedding tears of joy.
We parted. It was then the early spring;
I left her busy with her garden tools;
And well remember, o'er that fence she looked,
And while I paced along the foot-way path
Called out, and sent a blessing after me
With tender cheerfulness and with a voice
That seemed the very sound of happy thoughts.

I roved o'er many a hill and many a dale

290 With this my weary load, in heat and cold,
Through many a wood, and many an open ground,
In sunshine or in shade, in wet or fair,
Now blithe, now drooping, as it might befall,

My best companions now the driving winds
And now the 'trotting brooks' and whispering trees
And now the music of my own sad steps,
With many a short-lived thought that passed between
And disappeared. I came this way again
Towards the wane of summer, when the wheat
300 Was yellow, and the soft and bladed grass
Sprang up afresh and o'er the hay-field spread
Its tender green. When I had reached the door
I found that she was absent. In the shade
Where now we sit I waited her return.
Her cottage in its outward look appeared
As chearful as before; in any shew
Of neatness little changed, but that I thought
The honeysuckle crowded round the door
And from the wall hung down in heavier wreaths, 310 And knots of worthless stone-crop started out
Along the window's edge, and grew like weeds
Against the lower panes. I turned aside
And strolled into her garden. – It was changed:
The unprofitable bindweed spread his bells
From side to side and with unwieldy wreaths
Had dragged the rose from its sustaining wall
And bent it down to earth; the border-tufts –
Daisy and thrift and lowly camomile
And thyme – had straggled out into the paths
320 Which they were used to deck. Ere this an hour
Was wasted. Back I turned my restless steps,
And as I walked before the door it chanced
A stranger passed, and guessing whom I sought
He said that she was used to ramble far.
The sun was sinking in the west, and now
I sate with sad impatience. From within Her solitary infant cried aloud.
The spot though fair seemed very desolate:

The longer I remained more desolate.
330 And, looking round, I saw the corner-stones,
Till then unmarked, on either side the door
With dull red stains discoloured and stuck o'er
With tufts and hairs of wool, as if the sheep
That feed upon the commons thither came Familiarly and found a couching-place
Even at her threshold. – The house-clock struck eight;
I turned and saw her distant a few steps.
Her face was pale and thin, her figure too
Was changed. As she unlocked the door she said 340 “It grieves me you have waited here so long,
But in good truth I've wandered much of late
And sometimes, to my shame I speak, have need
Of my best prayers to bring me back again.”
While on the board she spread our evening meal
She told me she had lost her elder child,
That he for months had been a serving-boy
Apprenticed by the parish. “I perceive
You look at me, and you have cause. Today
I have been travelling far, and many days
350 About the fields I wander, knowing this Only, that what I seek I cannot find.
And so I waste my time: for I am changed;
And to myself,” said she, “have done much wrong,
And to this helpless infant. I have slept
Weeping, and weeping I have waked; my tears
Have flowed as if my body were not such
As others are, and I could never die.
But I am now in mind and in my heart
More easy, and I hope,” said she, “that heaven
360 Will give me patience to endure the things
Which I behold at home.” It would have grieved
Your very heart to see her. Sir, I feel
The story linger in my heart. I fear

'Tis long and tedious, but my spirit clings
To that poor woman: so familiarly
Do I perceive her manner, and her look
And presence, and so deeply do I feel
Her goodness, that not seldom in my walks
A momentary trance comes over me;
370 And to myself I seem to muse on one
By sorrow laid asleep or borne away,
A human being destined to awake
To human life, or something very near
To human life, when he shall come again
For whom she suffered. Sir, it would have grieved
Your very soul to see her: evermore
Her eye-lids drooped, her eyes were downward cast;
And when she at her table gave me food
She did not look at me. Her voice was low,
Her body was subdued. In every act 380
Pertaining to her house-affairs appeared
The careless stillness which a thinking mind
Gives to an idle matter – still she sighed,
But yet no motion of the breast was seen,
No heaving of the heart. While by the fire
We sate together, sighs came on my ear;
I knew not how, and hardly whence they came.
I took my staff, and when I kissed her babe
The tears stood in her eyes. I left her then 390 With the best hope and comfort I could give;
She thanked me for my will, but for my hope
It seemed she did not thank me.

I returned

And took my rounds along this road again
Ere on its sunny bank the primrose flower
Had chronicled the earliest day of spring.

I found her sad and drooping; she had learned
No tidings of her husband: if he lived
She knew not that he lived; if he were dead
She knew not he was dead. She seemed the same
400 In person [] appearance, but her house
Bespoke a sleepy hand of negligence;
The floor was neither dry nor neat, the hearth
Was comfortless [],
The windows too were dim, and her few books,
Which, one upon the other, heretofore
Had been piled up against the corner-panes
In seemly order, now with straggling leaves
Lay scattered here and there, open or shut
As they had chanced to fall. Her infant babe
410 Had from its mother caught the trick of grief
And sighed among its playthings. Once again
I turned towards the garden-gate and saw
More plainly still that poverty and grief
Were now come nearer to her: the earth was hard,
With weeds defaced and knots of withered grass;
No ridges there appeared of clear black mould,
No winter greenness: of her herbs and flowers
It seemed the better part were gnawed away
Or trampled on the earth; a chain of straw
420 Which had been twisted round the tender stem
Of a young apple-tree lay at its root;
The bark was nibbled round by truant sheep.
Margaret stood near, her infant in her arms,
And seeing that my eye was on the tree
She said, "I fear it will be dead and gone Ere Robert come again." Towards the house
Together we returned, and she inquired
If I had any hope. But for her Babe
And for her little friendless Boy, she said,
430 She had no wish to live, that she must die

Of sorrow. Yet I saw the idle loom
Still in its place. His Sunday garments hung
Upon the self-same nail, his very staff
Stood undisturbed behind the door. And when I passed this way beaten by Autumn winds
She told me that her little babe was dead
And she was left alone. That very time,
I yet remember, through the miry lane
She walked with me a mile, when the bare trees
440 Trickled with foggy damps, and in such sort
That any heart had ached to hear her begged
That wheresoe'er I went I still would ask
For him whom she had lost. We parted then,
Our final parting, for from that time forth
Did many seasons pass ere I returned
Into this tract again.

Five tedious years

She lingered in unquiet widowhood,
A wife and widow. Needs must it have been A sore heart-wasting. I have heard, my friend, 450 That in that broken arbour she would sit
The idle length of half a sabbath day –
There, where you see the toadstool's lazy head –
And when a dog passed by she still would quit
The shade and look abroad. On this old Bench
For hours she sate, and evermore her eye
Was busy in the distance, shaping things
Which made her heart beat quick. Seest thou that path?
(The green-sward now has broken its grey line)
There to and fro she paced through many a day
460 Of the warm summer, from a belt of flax
That girt her waist spinning the long-drawn thread
With backward steps. – Yet ever as there passed
A man whose garments shewed the Soldier's red,

Or crippled Mendicant in Sailor's garb,
The little child who sate to turn the wheel
Ceased from his toil, and she with faltering voice,
Expecting still to learn her husband's fate,
Made many a fond inquiry; and when they Whose presence gave no comfort were gone by, 470 Her heart was still more sad. And by yon gate
Which bars the traveller's road she often stood
And when a stranger horseman came, the latch
Would lift, and in his face look wistfully.
Most happy if from aught discovered there
Of tender feeling she might dare repeat
The same sad question. Meanwhile her poor hut
Sunk to decay, for he was gone whose hand
At the first nippings of October frost
Closed up each chink and with fresh bands of straw
480 Chequered the green-grown thatch. And so she lived Through the long winter, reckless and alone,
Till this reft house by frost, and thaw, and rain
Was sapped; and when she slept the nightly damps
Did chill her breast, and in the stormy day
Her tattered clothes were ruffled by the wind
Even at the side of her own fire. Yet still
She loved this wretched spot, nor would for worlds
Have parted hence; and still that length of road
And this rude Bench one torturing hope endeared, 490 Fast rooted at her heart, and here, my friend,
In sickness she remained, and here she died,
Last human tenant of these ruined walls.'

The old Man ceased: he saw that I was moved;

From that low Bench, rising instinctively,
I turned aside in weakness, nor had power
To thank him for the tale which he had told.
I stood, and leaning o'er the garden-gate

Reviewed that Woman's sufferings, and it seemed To comfort me while with a brother's love
500 I blessed her in the impotence of grief.
At length [] the []
Fondly, and traced with milder interest
That secret spirit of humanity
Which, 'mid the calm oblivious tendencies
Of nature, 'mid her plants, her weeds, and flowers,
And silent overgrowings, still survived.
The old man, seeing this, resumed and said,
'My Friend, enough to sorrow have you given,
The purposes of wisdom ask no more;
510 Be wise and chearful, and no longer read
The forms of things with an unworthy eye.
She sleeps in the calm earth, and peace is here.
I well remember that those very plumes,
Those weeds, and the high spear-grass on that wall,
By mist and silent rain-drops silvered o'er,
As once I passed did to my heart convey
So still an image of tranquillity,
So calm and still, and looked so beautiful
Amid the uneasy thoughts which filled my mind,
520 That what we feel of sorrow and despair
From ruin and from change, and all the grief
The passing shews of being leave behind,
Appeared an idle dream that could not live
Where meditation was. I turned away
And walked along my road in happiness.'

He ceased. By this the sun declining shot

A slant and mellow radiance which began
To fall upon us where beneath the trees
We sate on that low Bench, and now we felt, 530 Admonished thus, the sweet hour coming on.
A linnet warbled from those lofty elms,

A thrush sang loud, and other melodies,
At distance heard, peopled the milder air.
The old man rose and hoisted up his load.
Together casting then a farewell look
Upon those silent walls, we left the shade
And ere the stars were visible attained
A rustic inn, our evening resting-place.

A Night-Piece

The sky is overspread

With a close veil of one continuous cloud
All whitened by the moon, that just appears,
A dim-seen orb, yet chequers not the ground
With any shadow – plant, or tower, or tree.
At last a pleasant instantaneous light
Startles the musing man whose eyes are bent
To earth. He looks around, the clouds are split
Asunder, and above his head he views
10 The clear moon and the glory of the heavens.
There in a black-blue vault she sails along
Followed by multitudes of stars, that small,
And bright, and sharp along the gloomy vault
Drive as she drives. How fast they wheel away!
Yet vanish not! The wind is in the trees;
But they are silent. Still they roll along
Immeasurably distant, and the vault
Built round by those white clouds, enormous clouds,
Still deepens its interminable depth.
20 At length the vision closes, and the mind
Not undisturbed by the deep joy it feels,
Which slowly settles into peaceful calm,
Is left to muse upon the solemn scene.

The Old Cumberland Beggar

A Description

The class of Beggars to which the old man here described belongs, will probably soon be extinct. It consisted of poor, and, mostly, old and infirm persons, who confined themselves to a stated round in their neighbourhood, and had certain fixed days, on which, at different houses, they regularly received charity; sometimes in money, but mostly in provisions.

I saw an aged Beggar in my walk,

And he was seated by the highway side
On a low structure of rude masonry
Built at the foot of a huge hill, that they
Who lead their horses down the steep rough road
May thence remount at ease. The aged man
Had placed his staff across the broad smooth stone
That overlays the pile, and from a bag
All white with flour the dole of village dames, 10 He drew his scraps and fragments, one by one,
And scanned them with a fixed and serious look
Of idle computation. In the sun,
Upon the second step of that small pile,
Surrounded by those wild unpeopled hills,
He sate, and eat his food in solitude;
And ever, scattered from his palsied hand,
That still attempting to prevent the waste,
Was baffled still, the crumbs in little showers
Fell on the ground, and the small mountain birds,

20 Not venturing yet to peck their destined meal,
Approached within the length of half his staff.

Him from my childhood have I known, and then

He was so old, he seems not older now;
He travels on, a solitary man,
So helpless in appearance, that for him
The sauntering horseman-traveller does not throw
With careless hands his alms upon the ground,
But stops that he may safely lodge the coin
Within the old Man's hat; nor quits him so,
30 But still when he has given his horse the rein
Towards the aged Beggar turns a look,
Sidelong and half-reverted. She who tends
The toll-gate, when in summer at her door
She turns her wheel, if on the road she sees
The aged Beggar coming, quits her work,
And lifts the latch for him that he may pass.
The Post-boy when his rattling wheels o'ertake
The aged Beggar, in the woody lane,
Shouts to him from behind, and, if perchance
40 The old Man does not change his course, the Boy
Turns with less noisy wheels to the road-side,
And passes gently by, without a curse
Upon his lips, or anger at his heart.
He travels on, a solitary Man,
His age has no companion. On the ground
His eyes are turned, and, as he moves along,
They move along the ground; and evermore,
Instead of common and habitual sight
Of fields with rural works, of hill and dale,
50 And the blue sky, one little span of earth
Is all his prospect. Thus, from day to day,

Bowbent, his eyes for ever on the ground,
He plies his weary journey, seeing still,
And never knowing that he sees, some straw,
Some scattered leaf, or marks which, in one track,
The nails of cart or chariot wheel have left
Impressed on the white road, in the same line,
At distance still the same. Poor Traveller!
His staff trails with him, scarcely do his feet 60 Disturb the summer dust, he is so still
In look and motion that the cottage curs,
Ere he have passed the door, will turn away
Weary of barking at him. Boys and girls,
The vacant and the busy, maids and youths,
And urchins newly breeched all pass him by:
Him even the slow-paced waggon leaves behind.

But deem not this man useless. – Statesman! ye

Who are so restless in your wisdom, ye
Who have a broom still ready in your hands
70 To rid the world of nuisances; ye proud,
Heart-swoln, while in your pride ye contemplate
Your talents, power, and wisdom, deem him not
A burthen of the earth. 'Tis Nature's law
That none, the meanest of created things,
Of forms created the most vile and brute,
The dullest or most noxious, should exist
Divorced from good, a spirit and pulse of good,
A life and soul to every mode of being Inseparably linked. While thus he creeps
80 From door to door, the Villagers in him
Behold a record which together binds
Past deeds and offices of charity
Else unremembered, and so keeps alive

The kindly mood in hearts which lapse of years,
And that half-wisdom half-experience gives
Make slow to feel, and by sure steps resign
To selfishness and cold oblivious cares.
Among the farms and solitary huts
Hamlets, and thinly-scattered villages,
90 Where'er the aged Beggar takes his rounds,
The mild necessity of use compels
To acts of love; and habit does the work
Of reason, yet prepares that after joy
Which reason cherishes. And thus the soul,
By that sweet taste of pleasure unpursued
Doth find itself insensibly disposed
To virtue and true goodness. Some there are,
By their good works exalted, lofty minds
And meditative, authors of delight
100 And happiness, which to the end of time
Will live, and spread, and kindle; minds like these,
In childhood, from this solitary being,
This helpless wanderer, have perchance received,
(A thing more precious far than all that books
Or the solitudes of love can do!)

That first mild touch of sympathy and thought,
In which they found their kindred with a world
Where want and sorrow were. The easy man
Who sits at his own door, and like the pear
110 Which overhangs his head from the green wall,
Feeds in the sunshine; the robust and young,
The prosperous and unthinking, they who live
Sheltered, and flourish in a little grove
Of their own kindred, all behold in him
A silent monitor, which on their minds
Must needs impress a transitory thought
Of self-congratulation, to the heart
Of each recalling his peculiar boons,

His charters and exemptions; and perchance,
120 Though he to no one give the fortitude
And circumspection needful to preserve
His present blessings, and to husband up
The respite of the season, he, at least,
And 'tis no vulgar service, makes them felt.

Yet further. – Many, I believe, there are

Who live a life of virtuous decency,
Men who can hear the Decalogue and feel
No self-reproach, who of the moral law
Established in the land where they abide 130 Are strict observers, and not negligent,
Meanwhile, in any tenderness of heart
Or act of love to those with whom they dwell,
Their kindred, and the children of their blood.
Praise be to such, and to their slumbers peace!
– But of the poor man ask, the abject poor,
Go and demand of him, if there be here,
In this cold abstinence from evil deeds,
And these inevitable charities,
Wherewith to satisfy the human soul.
140 No – man is dear to man: the poorest poor
Long for some moments in a weary life
When they can know and feel that they have been Themselves the fathers and the dealers out
Of some small blessings, have been kind to such As needed kindness, for this single cause,
That we have all of us one human heart.
– Such pleasure is to one kind Being known,
My Neighbour, when with punctual care, each week
Duly as Friday comes, though pressed herself
150 By her own wants, she from her chest of meal

Takes one unsparing handful for the scrip
Of this old Mendicant, and, from her door
Returning with exhilarated heart,
Sits by her fire and builds her hope in heaven.

Then let him pass, a blessing on his head!

And while, in that vast solitude to which
The tide of things has led him, he appears
To breathe and live but for himself alone,
Unblamed, uninjured, let him bear about 160 The good which the benignant law of heaven
Has hung around him, and, while life is his,
Still let him prompt the unlettered Villagers
To tender offices and pensive thoughts.
Then let him pass, a blessing on his head!
And, long as he can wander, let him breathe
The freshness of the vallies, let his blood
Struggle with frosty air and winter snows,
And let the chartered wind that sweeps the heath
Beat his grey locks against his withered face.
170 Reverence the hope whose vital anxiousness
Gives the last human interest to his heart.
May never House, misnamed of industry,
Make him a captive; for that pent-up din,
Those life-consuming sounds that clog the air,
Be his the natural silence of old age.
Let him be free of mountain solitudes,
And have around him, whether heard or not,
The pleasant melody of woodland birds.
Few are his pleasures; if his eyes, which now
180 Have been so long familiar with the earth,
No more behold the horizontal sun
Rising or setting, let the light at least

Find a free entrance to their languid orbs.
And let him, where and when he will, sit down
Beneath the trees, or by the grassy bank
Of high-way side, and with the little birds
Share his chance-gathered meal, and, finally,
As in the eye of Nature he has lived,
So in the eye of Nature let him die.

Lines

Written at a Small Distance from my House, and Sent by my Little Boy to the Person to Whom They Are Addressed

It is the first mild day of March:
Each minute sweeter than before,
The red-breast sings from the tall larch
That stands beside our door.

There is a blessing in the air,

Which seems a sense of joy to yield
To the bare trees, and mountains bare,
And grass in the green field.

My Sister! ('tis a wish of mine)

10 Now that our morning meal is done,
Make haste, your morning task resign;
Come forth and feel the sun.

Edward will come with you, and pray,

Put on with speed your woodland dress,
And bring no book, for this one day
We'll give to idleness.

No joyless forms shall regulate

Our living Calendar:
We from to-day, my friend, will date
20 The opening of the year.

Love, now an universal birth,

From heart to heart is stealing,
From earth to man, from man to earth,
– It is the hour of feeling.

One moment now may give us more

Than fifty years of reason;
Our minds shall drink at every pore
The spirit of the season.

Some silent laws our hearts may make,

30 Which they shall long obey;
We for the year to come may take
Our temper from to-day.

And from the blessed power that rolls

About, below, above;
We'll frame the measure of our souls,
They shall be tuned to love.

Then come, my sister! come, I pray,

With speed put on your woodland dress,
And bring no book; for this one day
40 We'll give to idleness.

Goody Blake and Harry Gill

A True Story

Oh! what's the matter? what's the matter?
What is't that ails young Harry Gill?
That evermore his teeth they chatter,
Chatter, chatter, chatter still.
Of waistcoats Harry has no lack,
Good duffle grey, and flannel fine;
He has a blanket on his back,
And coats enough to smother nine.

In March, December, and in July,

10 'Tis all the same with Harry Gill;
The neighbours tell, and tell you truly,
His teeth they chatter, chatter still.
At night, at morning, and at noon,
'Tis all the same with Harry Gill;
Beneath the sun, beneath the moon,
His teeth they chatter, chatter still.

Young Harry was a lusty drover,

And who so stout of limb as he?
His cheeks were red as ruddy clover,
20 His voice was like the voice of three.
Auld Goody Blake was old and poor,

Ill fed she was, and thinly clad;
And any man who passed her door,
Might see how poor a hut she had.

All day she spun in her poor dwelling,

And then her three hours' work at night!
Alas! 'twas hardly worth the telling,
It would not pay for candle-light.
– This woman dwelt in Dorsetshire,
30 Her hut was on a cold hill-side,
And in that country coals are dear,
For they come far by wind and tide.

By the same fire to boil their pottage,

Two poor old dames, as I have known,
Will often live in one small cottage,
But she, poor woman, dwelt alone.
'Twas well enough when summer came,
The long, warm, lightsome summer-day,
Then at her door the canty dame
40 Would sit, as any linnet gay.

But when the ice our streams did fether,

Oh! then how her old bones would shake!
You would have said, if you had met her,
'Twas a hard time for Goody Blake.
Her evenings then were dull and dead;
Sad case it was, as you may think,
For very cold to go to bed,
And then for cold not sleep a wink.

Oh joy for her! when e'er in winter

50 The winds at night had made a rout,
And scattered many a lusty splinter,
And many a rotten bough about.
Yet never had she, well or sick,
As every man who knew her says,
A pile before-hand, wood or stick,
Enough to warm her for three days.

Now, when the frost was past enduring,

And made her poor old bones to ache,
Could any thing be more alluring,
60 Than an old hedge to Goody Blake?
And now and then, it must be said,
When her old bones were cold and chill,
She left her fire, or left her bed,
To seek the hedge of Harry Gill.

Now Harry he had long suspected

This trespass of old Goody Blake,
And vowed that she should be detected,
And he on her would vengeance take.
And oft from his warm fire he'd go, 70 And to the fields his road would take,
And there, at night, in frost and snow,
He watched to seize old Goody Blake.

And once, behind a rick of barley,

Thus looking out did Harry stand;
The moon was full and shining clearly,

And crisp with frost the stubble-land.
– He hears a noise – he's all awake –
Again? – on tip-toe down the hill
He softly creeps – 'Tis Goody Blake,
80 She's at the hedge of Harry Gill.

Right glad was he when he beheld her:

Stick after stick did Goody pull,
He stood behind a bush of elder,
Till she had filled her apron full.
When with her load she turned about,
The bye-road back again to take,
He started forward with a shout,
And sprang upon poor Goody Blake.

And fiercely by the arm he took her,

90 And by the arm he held her fast,
And fiercely by the arm he shook her,
And cried, 'I've caught you then at last!'
Then Goody, who had nothing said,
Her bundle from her lap let fall;
And kneeling on the sticks, she prayed
To God that is the judge of all.

She prayed, her withered hand uprearing,

While Harry held her by the arm –
'God! who art never out of hearing,
100 Oh may he never more be warm!'
The cold, cold moon above her head,
Thus on her knees did Goody pray,
Young Harry heard what she had said,

And icy-cold he turned away.

He went complaining all the morrow

That he was cold and very chill:
His face was gloom, his heart was sorrow,
Alas! that day for Harry Gill!
That day he wore a riding-coat, 110 But not a whit the warmer he:
Another was on Thursday brought,
And ere the Sabbath he had three.

'Twas all in vain, a useless matter,

And blankets were about him pinned;
Yet still his jaws and teeth they clatter,
Like a loose casement in the wind.
And Harry's flesh it fell away;
And all who see him say 'tis plain,
That, live as long as live he may,
120 He never will be warm again.

No word to any man he utters,

A-bed or up, to young or old;
But ever to himself he mutters,
'Poor Harry Gill is very cold.'
A-bed or up, by night or day;
His teeth they chatter, chatter still.
Now think, ye farmers all, I pray,
Of Goody Blake and Harry Gill.

The Thorn

There is a thorn; it looks so old,

In truth you'd find it hard to say,
How it could ever have been young,
It looks so old and grey.

Not higher than a two-years' child,
It stands erect this aged thorn;
No leaves it has, no thorny points;
It is a mass of knotted joints,
A wretched thing forlorn.

10 It stands erect, and like a stone
With lichens it is overgrown.

Like rock or stone, it is o'ergrown

With lichens to the very top,
And hung with heavy tufts of moss,
A melancholy crop:
Up from the earth these mosses creep,
And this poor thorn they clasp it round
So close, you'd say that they were bent
With plain and manifest intent,
20 To drag it to the ground;
And all had joined in one endeavour
To bury this poor thorn for ever.

High on a mountain's highest ridge,

Where oft the stormy winter gale
Cuts like a scythe, while through the clouds
It sweeps from vale to vale;
Not five yards from the mountain-path,
This thorn you on your left espy;
And to the left, three yards beyond,
30 You see a little muddy pond
Of water, never dry;
I've measured it from side to side:
'Tis three feet long, and two feet wide.

And close beside this aged thorn,

There is a fresh and lovely sight,
A beauteous heap, a hill of moss,
Just half a foot in height.
All lovely colours there you see,
All colours that were ever seen,
40 And mossy network too is there,
As if by hand of lady fair
The work had woven been,
And cups, the darlings of the eye,
So deep is their vermilion dye.

Ah me! what lovely tints are there!

Of olive-green and scarlet bright,
In spikes, in branches, and in stars,
Green, red, and pearly white.
This heap of earth o'ergrown with moss,

50 Which close beside the thorn you see,
So fresh in all its beauteous dyes,
Is like an infant's grave in size
As like as like can be:
But never, never any where,
An infant's grave was half so fair.

Now would you see this aged thorn,

This pond and beauteous hill of moss,
You must take care and chuse your time
The mountain when to cross.

60 For oft there sits, between the heap
That's like an infant's grave in size,
And that same pond of which I spoke,
A woman in a scarlet cloak,
And to herself she cries,
'Oh misery! oh misery!
Oh woe is me! oh misery!'

At all times of the day and night

This wretched woman thither goes,
And she is known to every star,
70 And every wind that blows;
And there beside the thorn she sits
When the blue day-light's in the skies,
And when the whirlwind's on the hill,
Or frosty air is keen and still,
And to herself she cries,
'Oh misery! oh misery!
Oh woe is me! oh misery!'

‘Now wherefore thus, by day and night,

In rain, in tempest, and in snow,
80 Thus to the dreary mountain-top
Does this poor woman go?
And why sits she beside the thorn
When the blue day-light's in the sky,
Or when the whirlwind's on the hill,
Or frosty air is keen and still,
And wherefore does she cry? –
Oh wherefore? wherefore? tell me why
Does she repeat that doleful cry?’

I cannot tell; I wish I could;

90 For the true reason no one knows,
But if you'd gladly view the spot,
The spot to which she goes;
The heap that's like an infant's grave,
The pond – and thorn, so old and grey,
Pass by her door – 'tis seldom shut –
And if you see her in her hut,
Then to the spot away! –
I never heard of such as dare
Approach the spot when she is there.
100

‘But wherefore to the mountain-top

Can this unhappy woman go,
Whatever star is in the skies,
Whatever wind may blow?’
Nay rack your brain – 'tis all in vain,
I'll tell you every thing I know;
But to the thorn, and to the pond

Which is a little step beyond,
I wish that you would go:
Perhaps when you are at the place
110 You something of her tale may trace.

I'll give you the best help I can:

Before you up the mountain go,
Up to the dreary mountain-top,
I'll tell you all I know.
'Tis now some two and twenty years,
Since she (her name is Martha Ray)
Gave with a maiden's true good will Her company to Stephen Hill;

And she was blithe and gay,
120 And she was happy, happy still Whene'er she thought of Stephen Hill.

And they had fixed the wedding-day,

The morning that must wed them both;
But Stephen to another maid
Had sworn another oath;
And with this other maid to church
Unthinking Stephen went –
Poor Martha! on that woful day

A cruel, cruel fire, they say, 130 Into her bones was sent:
It dried her body like a cinder,
And almost turned her brain to tinder.

They say, full six months after this,

While yet the summer-leaves were green,
She to the mountain-top would go,
And there was often seen.
'Tis said, a child was in her womb,
As now to any eye was plain
She was with child, and she was mad,
140 Yet often she was sober sad
From her exceeding pain.
Oh me! ten thousand times I'd rather
That he had died, that cruel father!

Sad case for such a brain to hold

Communion with a stirring child!
Sad case, as you may think, for one
Who had a brain so wild!
Last Christmas when we talked of this,
Old Farmer Simpson did maintain,
150 That in her womb the infant wrought
About its mother's heart, and brought
Her senses back again:
And when at last her time drew near,
Her looks were calm, her senses clear.

No more I know, I wish I did,

And I would tell it all to you;
For what became of this poor child
There's none that ever knew:
And if a child was born or no,
160 There's no one that could ever tell;
And if 'twas born alive or dead,

There's no one knows, as I have said,
But some remember well,
That Martha Ray about this time
Would up the mountain often climb.

And all that winter, when at night

The wind blew from the mountain-peak,
'Twas worth your while, though in the dark,
The church-yard path to seek:
170 For many a time and oft were heard
Cries coming from the mountain-head,
Some plainly living voices were,
And others, I've heard many swear,
Were voices of the dead:
I cannot think, whate'er they say,
They had to do with Martha Ray.

But that she goes to this old thorn,

The thorn which I've described to you,
And there sits in a scarlet cloak,
180 I will be sworn is true.
For one day with my telescope,
To view the ocean wide and bright,
When to this country first I came,
Ere I had heard of Martha's name,
I climbed the mountain's height:
A storm came on, and I could see
No object higher than my knee.

'Twas mist and rain, and storm and rain,

No screen, no fence could I discover,
190 And then the wind! in faith, it was
A wind full ten times over.
I looked around, I thought I saw
A jutting crag, and off I ran,
Head-foremost, through the driving rain,
The shelter of the crag to gain,
And, as I am a man,
Instead of jutting crag, I found
A woman seated on the ground.

I did not speak – I saw her face,

200 Her face it was enough for me;
I turned about and heard her cry,
‘O misery! O misery!’
And there she sits, until the moon
Through half the clear blue sky will go,
And when the little breezes make
The waters of the pond to shake,
As all the country know,
She shudders and you hear her cry,
‘Oh misery! oh misery!’
210

‘But what's the thorn? and what's the pond?

And what's the hill of moss to her?
And what's the creeping breeze that comes
The little pond to stir?’
I cannot tell; but some will say
She hanged her baby on the tree,
Some say she drowned it in the pond,
Which is a little step beyond,
But all and each agree,

The little babe was buried there,
220 Beneath that hill of moss so fair.

I've heard the scarlet moss is red

With drops of that poor infant's blood;
But kill a new-born infant thus!
I do not think she could.
Some say, if to the pond you go,
And fix on it a steady view,
The shadow of a babe you trace,
A baby and a baby's face,
And that it looks at you;
230 Whene'er you look on it, 'tis plain
The baby looks at you again.

And some had sworn an oath that she

Should be to public justice brought;
And for the little infant's bones
With spades they would have sought.
But then the beauteous hill of moss
Before their eyes began to stir;
And for full fifty yards around,
The grass it shook upon the ground;
240 But all do still aver
The little babe is buried there,
Beneath that hill of moss so fair.

I cannot tell how this may be,

But plain it is, the thorn is bound
With heavy tufts of moss, that strive

To drag it to the ground.
And this I know, full many a time,
When she was on the mountain high,
By day, and in the silent night,
250 When all the stars shone clear and bright,
That I have heard her cry,
'Oh misery! oh misery!
O woe is me! oh misery!'

The Idiot Boy

'Tis eight o'clock, – a clear March night,
The moon is up – the sky is blue,
The owlet in the moonlight air,
He shouts from nobody knows where;
He lengthens out his lonely shout,
Halloo! halloo! a long halloo!

– Why bustle thus about your door,

What means this bustle, Betty Foy?
Why are you in this mighty fret?
10 And why on horseback have you set
Him whom you love, your idiot boy?

Beneath the moon that shines so bright,

Till she is tired, let Betty Foy
With girt and stirrup fiddle-faddle;
But wherefore set upon a saddle
Him whom she loves, her idiot boy?

There's scarce a soul that's out of bed;

Good Betty! put him down again;
His lips with joy they burr at you,

20 But, Betty! what has he to do
With stirrup, saddle, or with rein?

The world will say 'tis very idle,

Bethink you of the time of night;
There's not a mother, no not one,
But when she hears what you have done,
Oh! Betty she'll be in a fright.

But Betty's bent on her intent,

For her good neighbour, Susan Gale,
Old Susan, she who dwells alone,
30 Is sick, and makes a piteous moan,
As if her very life would fail.

There's not a house within a mile,

No hand to help them in distress:
Old Susan lies a bed in pain,
And sorely puzzled are the twain,
For what she ails they cannot guess.

And Betty's husband's at the wood,

Where by the week he doth abide,
A woodman in the distant vale;
40 There's none to help poor Susan Gale,
What must be done? what will betide?

And Betty from the lane has fetched

Her pony, that is mild and good,
Whether he be in joy or pain,
Feeding at will along the lane,
Or bringing faggots from the wood.

And he is all in travelling trim,

And by the moonlight, Betty Foy
Has up upon the saddle set,
50 The like was never heard of yet,
Him whom she loves, her idiot boy.

And he must post without delay

Across the bridge that's in the dale,
And by the church, and o'er the down,
To bring a doctor from the town,
Or she will die, old Susan Gale.

There is no need of boot or spur,

There is no need of whip or wand,
For Johnny has his holly-bough,
60 And with a hurly-burly now
He shakes the green bough in his hand.

And Betty o'er and o'er has told

The boy who is her best delight,
Both what to follow, what to shun,
What do, and what to leave undone,

How turn to left, and how to right.

And Betty's most especial charge,

Was, 'Johnny! Johnny! mind that you
Come home again, nor stop at all,
70 Come home again, whate'er befall,
My Johnny do, I pray you do.'

To this did Johnny answer make,

Both with his head, and with his hand,
And proudly shook the bridle too,
And then! his words were not a few,
Which Betty well could understand.

And now that Johnny is just going,

Though Betty's in a mighty flurry,
She gently pats the pony's side,
80 On which her idiot boy must ride,
And seems no longer in a hurry.

But when the pony moved his legs,

Oh! then for the poor idiot boy!
For joy he cannot hold the bridle,
For joy his head and heels are idle,
He's idle all for very joy.

And while the pony moves his legs,

In Johnny's left-hand you may see,
The green bough's motionless and dead;
90 The moon that shines above his head
Is not more still and mute than he.

His heart it was so full of glee,

That till full fifty yards were gone,
He quite forgot his holly whip,
And all his skill in horsemanship,
Oh! happy, happy, happy John.

And Betty's standing at the door,

And Betty's face with joy o'erflows,
Proud of herself, and proud of him,
100 She sees him in his travelling trim;
How quietly her Johnny goes.

The silence of her idiot boy,

What hopes it sends to Betty's heart!
He's at the guide-post – he turns right,
She watches till he's out of sight,
And Betty will not then depart.

Burr, burr – now Johnny's lips they burr,

As loud as any mill, or near it,
Meek as a lamb the pony moves,
110 And Johnny makes the noise he loves,
And Betty listens, glad to hear it.

Away she hies to Susan Gale:

And Johnny's in a merry tune,
The owlets hoot, the owlets curr,
And Johnny's lips they burr, burr, burr,
And on he goes beneath the moon.

His steed and he right well agree,

For of this pony there's a rumour,
That should he lose his eyes and ears,
120 And should he live a thousand years,
He never will be out of humour.

But then he is a horse that thinks!

And when he thinks his pace is slack;
Now, though he knows poor Johnny well,
Yet for his life he cannot tell
What he has got upon his back.

So through the moonlight lanes they go,

And far into the moonlight dale,
And by the church, and o'er the down,
130 To bring a doctor from the town,
To comfort poor old Susan Gale.

And Betty, now at Susan's side,

Is in the middle of her story,

What comfort Johnny soon will bring,
With many a most diverting thing,
Of Johnny's wit and Johnny's glory.

And Betty's still at Susan's side:

By this time she's not quite so flurried;
Demure with porringer and plate
140 She sits, as if in Susan's fate
Her life and soul were buried

But Betty, poor good woman! she,

You plainly in her face may read it,
Could lend out of that moment's store
Five years of happiness or more,
To any that might need it.

But yet I guess that now and then

With Betty all was not so well,
And to the road she turns her ears,
150 And thence full many a sound she hears,
Which she to Susan will not tell.

Poor Susan moans, poor Susan groans,

‘As sure as there's a moon in heaven,’
Cries Betty, ‘he'll be back again;
They'll both be here, 'tis almost ten,
They'll both be here before eleven.’

Poor Susan moans, poor Susan groans,

The clock gives warning for eleven;
'Tis on the stroke – 'If Johnny's near,' 160 Quoth Betty 'he will soon be here,
As sure as there's a moon in heaven.'

The clock is on the stroke of twelve,

And Johnny is not yet in sight,
The moon's in heaven, as Betty sees,
But Betty is not quite at ease;
And Susan has a dreadful night.

And Betty, half an hour ago,

On Johnny vile reflections cast;
'A little idle sauntering thing!'
170 With other names, an endless string,
But now that time is gone and past.

And Betty's drooping at the heart,

That happy time all past and gone,
'How can it be he is so late?
The doctor he has made him wait,
Susan! they'll both be here anon.'

And Susan's growing worse and worse,

And Betty's in a sad quandary;
And then there's nobody to say 180 If she must go or she must stay:

– She's in a sad quandary.

The clock is on the stroke of one;

But neither Doctor nor his guide
Appear along the moonlight road,
There's neither horse nor man abroad,
And Betty's still at Susan's side.

And Susan she begins to fear

Of sad mischances not a few,
That Johnny may perhaps be drowned,
190 Or lost perhaps, and never found;
Which they must both for ever rue

She prefaced half a hint of this

With, 'God forbid it should be true!'
At the first word that Susan said
Cried Betty, rising from the bed,
'Susan, I'd gladly stay with you.

I must be gone, I must away,

Consider, Johnny's but half-wise;
Susan, we must take care of him,
200 If he is hurt in life or limb' –

'Oh God forbid!' poor Susan cries.

'What can I do?' says Betty, going,

‘What can I do to ease your pain?
Good Susan tell me, and I'll stay;
I fear you're in a dreadful way,
But I shall soon be back again.'

‘Good Betty go, good Betty go,

There's nothing that can ease my pain.’
Then off she hies, but with a prayer
210 That God poor Susan's life would spare,
Till she comes back again.

So, through the moonlight lane she goes,

And far into the moonlight dale;
And how she ran, and how she walked,
And all that to herself she talked,
Would surely be a tedious tale.

In high and low, above, below,

In great and small, in round and square,
In tree and tower was Johnny seen,
220 In bush and brake, in black and green,
'Twas Johnny, Johnny, every where.

She's past the bridge that's in the dale,

And now the thought torments her sore,
Johnny perhaps his horse forsook,
To hunt the moon that's in the brook,
And never will be heard of more.

And now she's high upon the down,

Alone amid a prospect wide;
There's neither Johnny nor his horse,
230 Among the fern or in the gorse;
There's neither doctor nor his guide.

‘Oh saints! what is become of him?

Perhaps he's climbed into an oak,
Where he will stay till he is dead;
Or sadly he has been misled,
And joined the wandering gypsy-folk.

Or him that wicked pony's carried

To the dark cave, the goblins' hall,
Or in the castle he's pursuing,
240 Among the ghosts, his own undoing;
Or playing with the waterfall.’

At poor old Susan then she railed,

While to the town she posts away;
‘If Susan had not been so ill,
Alas! I should have had him still,
My Johnny, till my dying day.’

Poor Betty! in this sad distemper,

The doctor's self would hardly spare,

Unworthy things she talked and wild,
250 Even he, of cattle the most mild,
The pony had his share.

And now she's got into the town,

And to the doctor's door she hies;
'Tis silence all on every side;
The town so long, the town so wide,
Is silent as the skies.

And now she's at the doctor's door,

She lifts the knocker, rap, rap, rap,
The doctor at the casement shews,
260 His glimmering eyes that peep and doze;
And one hand rubs his old night-cap.

'Oh Doctor! Doctor! where's my Johnny?'

'I'm here, what is't you want with me?'
'Oh Sir! you know I'm Betty Foy,
And I have lost my poor dear boy,
You know him – him you often see;

He's not so wise as some folks be,'

'The devil take his wisdom!' said
The Doctor, looking somewhat grim,
270 'What, woman! should I know of him?'
And, grumbling, he went back to bed.

‘O woe is me! O woe is me!

Here will I die; here will I die;
I thought to find my Johnny here,
But he is neither far nor near,
Oh! what a wretched mother I!’

She stops, she stands, she looks about,

Which way to turn she cannot tell.
Poor Betty! it would ease her pain
280 If she had heart to knock again;
– The clock strikes three – a dismal knell!

Then up along the town she hies,

No wonder if her senses fail,
This piteous news so much it shocked her,
She quite forgot to send the Doctor,
To comfort poor old Susan Gale.

And now she's high upon the down,

And she can see a mile of road,
‘Oh cruel! I'm almost three-score;
290 Such night as this was ne'er before,
There's not a single soul abroad.’

She listens, but she cannot hear

The foot of horse, the voice of man;
The streams with softest sound are flowing,
The grass you almost hear it growing,

You hear it now if e'er you can.

The owlets through the long blue night

Are shouting to each other still:

Fond lovers, yet not quite hob nob,

300 They lengthen out the tremulous sob

That echoes far from hill to hill.

Poor Betty now has lost all hope,

Her thoughts are bent on deadly sin;

A green-grown pond she just has passed,

And from the brink she hurries fast,

Lest she should drown herself therein.

And now she sits her down and weeps;

Such tears she never shed before;

'O dear, dear pony! my sweet joy!

310 Oh carry back my idiot boy!

And we will ne'er o'erload thee more.'

A thought is come into her head;

'The pony he is mild and good,

And we have always used him well;

Perhaps he's gone along the dell,

And carried Johnny to the wood.'

Then up she springs as if on wings;

She thinks no more of deadly sin;
If Betty fifty ponds should see,
320 The last of all her thoughts would be,
To drown herself therein.

Oh reader! now that I might tell

What Johnny and his horse are doing!
What they've been doing all this time,
Oh could I put it into rhyme,
A most delightful tale pursuing!

Perhaps, and no unlikely thought!

He with his pony now doth roam
The cliffs and peaks so high that are,
330 To lay his hands upon a star,
And in his pocket bring it home.

Perhaps he's turned himself about,

His face unto his horse's tail,
And still and mute, in wonder lost,
All like a silent horseman-ghost,
He travels on along the vale.

And now, perhaps, he's hunting sheep,

A fierce and dreadful hunter he!
Yon valley, that's so trim and green,
340 In five months' time, should he be seen,
A desert wilderness will be.

Perhaps, with head and heels on fire,

And like the very soul of evil,
He's galloping away, away,
And so he'll gallop on for aye,
The bane of all that dread the devil.

I to the muses have been bound,

These fourteen years, by strong indentures;
Oh gentle muses! let me tell
350 But half of what to him befel.
For sure he met with strange adventures.

Oh gentle muses! is this kind?

Why will ye thus my suit repel?
Why of your further aid bereave me?
And can ye thus unfriended leave me?
Ye muses! whom I love so well.

Who's yon, that, near the waterfall,

Which thunders down with headlong force,
Beneath the moon, yet shining fair, 360 As careless as if nothing were,
Sits upright on a feeding horse?

Unto his horse, that's feeding free,

He seems, I think, the rein to give;

Of moon or stars he takes no heed;
Of such we in romances read,
– 'Tis Johnny! Johnny! as I live.

And that's the very pony too.

Where is she, where is Betty Foy?
She hardly can sustain her fears;
370 The roaring water-fall she hears,
And cannot find her idiot boy.

Your pony's worth his weight in gold,

Then calm your terrors, Betty Foy!
She's coming from among the trees,
And now, all full in view, she sees
Him whom she loves, her idiot boy.

And Betty sees the pony too:

Why stand you thus Good Betty Foy?
It is not goblin, 'tis no ghost,
380 'Tis he whom you so long have lost,
He whom you love, your idiot boy.

She looks again – her arms are up –

She screams – she cannot move for joy;
She darts as with a torrent's force,
She almost has o'eturned the horse,
And fast she holds her idiot boy.

And Johnny burrs and laughs aloud,

Whether in cunning or in joy,
I cannot tell; but while he laughs,
390 Betty a drunken pleasure quaffs,
To hear again her idiot boy.

And now she's at the pony's tail,

And now she's at the pony's head,
On that side now, and now on this,
And almost stifled with her bliss,
A few sad tears does Betty shed.

She kisses o'er and o'er again,

Him whom she loves, her idiot boy,
She's happy here, she's happy there,
400 She is uneasy every where;
Her limbs are all alive with joy.

She pats the pony, where or when

She knows not, happy Betty Foy!
The little pony glad may be,
But he is milder far than she,
You hardly can perceive his joy.

‘Oh! Johnny, never mind the Doctor;

You've done your best, and that is all.’
She took the reins, when this was said,
410 And gently turned the pony's head

From the loud water-fall.

By this the stars were almost gone,

The moon was setting on the hill,
So pale you scarcely looked at her:
The little birds began to stir,
Though yet their tongues were still.

The pony, Betty, and her boy,

Wind slowly through the woody dale:
And who is she, be-times abroad,
420 That hobbles up the steep rough road?
Who is it, but old Susan Gale?

Long Susan lay deep lost in thought,

And many dreadful fears beset her,
Both for her messenger and nurse;
And as her mind grew worse and worse,
Her body it grew better.

She turned, she tossed herself in bed,

On all sides doubts and terrors met her;
Point after point did she discuss;
430 And while her mind was fighting thus,
Her body still grew better.

‘Alas! what is become of them?

These fears can never be endured,
I'll to the wood.' – The word scarce said,
Did Susan rise up from her bed,
As if by magic cured.

Away she posts up hill and down,

And to the wood at length is come,
She spies her friends, she shouts a greeting;
440 Oh me! it is a merry meeting,
As ever was in Christendom.

The owls have hardly sung their last,

While our four travellers homeward wend;
The owls have hooted all night long,
And with the owls began my song,
And with the owls must end.

For while they all were travelling home,

Cried Betty, 'Tell us Johnny, do,
Where all this long night you have been,
450 What you have heard, what you have seen,
And Johnny, mind you tell us true.'

Now Johnny all night long had heard

The owls in tuneful concert strive;
No doubt too he the moon had seen;
For in the moonlight he had been
From eight o'clock till five.

And thus to Betty's question, he

Made answer, like a traveller bold,
(His very words I give to you,)

460 'The cocks did crow to-whoo, to-whoo,

And the sun did shine so cold.'

– Thus answered Johnny in his glory,

And that was all his travel's story.

Lines Written in Early Spring

I heard a thousand blended notes,

While in a grove I sate reclined,
In that sweet mood when pleasant thoughts
Bring sad thoughts to the mind.

To her fair works did nature link

The human soul that through me ran;
And much it grieved my heart to think
What man has made of man.

Through primrose-tufts, in that sweet bower,

10 The periwinkle trailed its wreathes;
And 'tis my faith that every flower
Enjoys the air it breathes.

The birds around me hopped and played:

Their thoughts I cannot measure,
But the least motion which they made,
It seemed a thrill of pleasure.

The budding twigs spread out their fan,

To catch the breezy air;

And I must think, do all I can,

20 That there was pleasure there.

If I these thoughts may not prevent,

If such be of my creed the plan,

Have I not reason to lament

What man has made of man?

Anecdote for Fathers
Shewing How the Art of Lying May Be Taught

I have a boy of five years old,

His face is fair and fresh to see;
His limbs are cast in beauty's mould,
And dearly he loves me.

One morn we strolled on our dry walk,

Our quiet house all full in view,
And held such intermitted talk
As we are wont to do.

My thoughts on former pleasures ran;

10 I thought of Kilve's delightful shore,
My pleasant home, when spring began,
A long, long year before.

A day it was when I could bear

To think, and think, and think again;
With so much happiness to spare,
I could not feel a pain.

My boy was by my side, so slim

And graceful in his rustic dress!
And oftentimes I talked to him,
20 In very idleness.

The young lambs ran a pretty race;

The morning sun shone bright and warm;
'Kilve,' said I, 'was a pleasant place,
And so is Liswyn farm.

My little boy, which like you more,'

I said and took him by the arm
'Our home by Kilve's delightful shore,
Or here at Liswyn farm?'

'And tell me, had you rather be,'

30 I said and held him by the arm,
'At Kilve's smooth shore by the green sea,
Or here at Liswyn farm?'

In careless mood he looked at me

While still I held him by the arm,
And said, 'At Kilve I'd rather be Than here at Liswyn farm.'

‘Now, little Edward, say why so;

My little Edward, tell me why;’

‘I cannot tell, I do not know.’

40 ‘Why this is strange,’ said I.

‘For, here are woods and green-hills warm;

There surely must some reason be

Why you would change sweet Liswyn farm

For Kilve by the green sea.’

At this, my boy, so fair and slim,

Hung down his head, nor made reply;

And five times did I say to him,

‘Why? Edward, tell me why?’

His head he raised – there was in sight,

50 It caught his eye, he saw it plain –

Upon the house-top, glittering bright,

A broad and gilded vane.

Then did the boy his tongue unlock,

And thus to me he made reply;

‘At Kilve there was no weather-cock,

And that's the reason why.’

O dearest, dearest boy! my heart

For better lore would seldom yearn,
Could I but teach the hundredth part 60 Of what from thee I learn.

We Are Seven

A simple child, dear brother Jim,

That lightly draws its breath,
And feels its life in every limb,
What should it know of death?

I met a little cottage girl,

She was eight years old, she said;
Her hair was thick with many a curl
That clustered round her head.

She had a rustic, woodland air,

10 And she was wildly clad;
Her eyes were fair, and very fair,
– Her beauty made me glad.

‘Sisters and brothers, little maid,

How many may you be?’
‘How many? seven in all,’ she said,
And wondering looked at me.

‘And where are they, I pray you tell?’

She answered, ‘Seven are we,
And two of us at Conway dwell,
20 And two are gone to sea.

Two of us in the church-yard lie,

My sister and my brother,
And in the church-yard cottage, I
Dwell near them with my mother.’

‘You say that two at Conway dwell,

And two are gone to sea,
Yet you are seven; I pray you tell
Sweet Maid, how this may be?’

Then did the little Maid reply,

30 ‘Seven boys and girls are we;
Two of us in the church-yard lie,
Beneath the church-yard tree.’

‘You run about, my little maid,

Your limbs they are alive;
If two are in the church-yard laid,
Then ye are only five.’

‘Their graves are green, they may be seen,’

The little Maid replied,
‘Twelve steps or more from my mother's door,
40 And they are side by side.

‘My stockings there I often knit,

My ‘kerchief there I hem;
And there upon the ground I sit –
I sit and sing to them.

And often after sunset, Sir,

When it is light and fair,
I take my little porringer,
And eat my supper there.

The first that died was little Jane;

50 In bed she moaning lay,
Till God released her of her pain,
And then she went away.

So in the church-yard she was laid,

And all the summer dry,
Together round her grave we played,
My brother John and I.

And when the ground was white with snow,

And I could run and slide,
My brother John was forced to go,

60 And he lies by her side.'

'How many are you then,' said I,

'If they two are in Heaven?'

The little Maiden did reply,

'O Master! we are seven.'

'But they are dead; those two are dead!

Their spirits are in heaven!'

'Twas throwing words away; for still

The little Maid would have her will,

And said, 'Nay, we are seven!'

Expostulation and Reply

‘Why William, on that old grey stone,

Thus for the length of half a day,
Why William, sit you thus alone,
And dream your time away?

Where are your books? that light bequeathed

To beings else forlorn and blind!
Up! Up! and drink the spirit breathed
From dead men to their kind.

You look round on your mother earth,

10 As if she for no purpose bore you;
As if you were her first-born birth,
And none had lived before you!’

One morning thus, by Esthwaite lake,

When life was sweet I knew not why,
To me my good friend Matthew spake,
And thus I made reply.

'The eye it cannot chuse but see,

We cannot bid the ear be still;
Our bodies feel, where'er they be,
20 Against, or with our will.

Nor less I deem that there are powers,

Which of themselves our minds impress,
That we can feed this mind of ours,
In a wise passiveness.

Think you, 'mid all this mighty sum

Of things for ever speaking,
That nothing of itself will come,
But we must still be seeking?

– Then ask not wherefore, here, alone,

30 Conversing as I may,
I sit upon this old grey stone,
And dream my time away.'

The Tables Turned
An Evening Scene, on the Same Subject

Up! up! my friend, and clear your looks,

Why all this toil and trouble?

Up! up! my friend, and quit your books,
Or surely you'll grow double.

The sun above the mountain's head,

A freshening lustre mellow,
Through all the long green fields has spread,
His first sweet evening yellow.

Books! 'tis a dull and endless strife,

10 Come, hear the woodland linnet,
How sweet his music; on my life
There's more of wisdom in it.

And hark! how blithe the throstle sings!

And he is no mean preacher;
Come forth into the light of things,
Let Nature be your teacher.

She has a world of ready wealth,

Our minds and hearts to bless –
Spontaneous wisdom breathed by health, 20 Truth breathed by cheerfulness.

One impulse from a vernal wood

May teach you more of man;
Of moral evil and of good,
Than all the sages can.

Sweet is the lore which nature brings;

Our meddling intellect
Mis-shapes the beauteous forms of things;
– We murder to dissect.

Enough of science and of art;

30 Close up these barren leaves;
Come forth, and bring with you a heart
That watches and receives.

Lines Written a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey On Revisiting the Banks of the Wye During a Tour, July 13, 1798

Five years have passed; five summers, with the length

Of five long winters! and again I hear
These waters, rolling from their mountain-springs
With a sweet inland murmur. – Once again
Do I behold these steep and lofty cliffs,
Which on a wild secluded scene impress
Thoughts of more deep seclusion; and connect
The landscape with the quiet of the sky.
The day is come when I again repose
10 Here, under this dark sycamore, and view
These plots of cottage-ground, these orchard-tufts,
Which, at this season, with their unripe fruits,
Among the woods and copses lose themselves,
Nor, with their green and simple hue, disturb
The wild green landscape. Once again I see
These hedge-rows, hardly hedge-rows, little lines
Of sportive wood run wild; these pastoral farms
Green to the very door; and wreathes of smoke
Sent up, in silence, from among the trees, 20 With some uncertain notice, as might seem,
Of vagrant dwellers in the houseless woods,
Or of some hermit's cave, where by his fire

The hermit sits alone.

Though absent long,

These forms of beauty have not been to me,
As is a landscape to a blind man's eye:
But oft, in lonely rooms, and mid the din
Of towns and cities, I have owed to them,
In hours of weariness, sensations sweet,
Felt in the blood, and felt along the heart,
30 And passing even into my purer mind
With tranquil restoration: – feelings too
Of unremembered pleasure; such, perhaps,
As may have had no trivial influence
On that best portion of a good man's life;
His little, nameless, unremembered acts
Of kindness and of love. Nor less, I trust,
To them I may have owed another gift,
Of aspect more sublime; that blessed mood,
In which the burthen of the mystery,
40 In which the heavy and the weary weight
Of all this unintelligible world
Is lightened: – that serene and blessed mood,
In which the affections gently lead us on,
Until, the breath of this corporeal frame,
And even the motion of our human blood
Almost suspended, we are laid asleep
In body, and become a living soul:
While with an eye made quiet by the power
Of harmony, and the deep power of joy,

We see into the life of things.

If this

Be but a vain belief, yet, oh! how oft,
In darkness, and amid the many shapes
Of joyless day-light; when the fretful stir
Unprofitable, and the fever of the world,
Have hung upon the beatings of my heart,
How oft, in spirit, have I turned to thee
O sylvan Wye! Thou wanderer through the woods,
How often has my spirit turned to thee!

And now, with gleams of half-extinguished thought,

60 With many recognitions dim and faint,
And somewhat of a sad perplexity,
The picture of the mind revives again:
While here I stand, not only with the sense
Of present pleasure, but with pleasing thoughts
That in this moment there is life and food
For future years. And so I dare to hope
Though changed, no doubt, from what I was, when first
I came among these hills; when like a roe
I bounded o'er the mountains, by the sides
70 Of the deep rivers, and the lonely streams,
Wherever nature led; more like a man
Flying from something that he dreads, than one
Who sought the thing he loved. For nature then (The coarser pleasures of my boyish days,
And their glad animal movements all gone by,)
To me was all in all. – I cannot paint
What then I was. The sounding cataract
Haunted me like a passion: the tall rock,
The mountain, and the deep and gloomy wood,

80 Their colours and their forms, were then to me
An appetite: a feeling and a love,
That had no need of a remoter charm,
By thought supplied, or any interest
Unborrowed from the eye. – That time is past,
And all its aching joys are now no more,
And all its dizzy raptures. Not for this
Faint I, nor mourn nor murmur: other gifts
Have followed, for such loss, I would believe,
Abundant recompence. For I have learned
90 To look on nature, not as in the hour
Of thoughtless youth, but hearing oftentimes
The still, sad music of humanity,
Not harsh nor grating, though of ample power
To chasten and subdue. And I have felt
A presence that disturbs me with the joy
Of elevated thoughts; a sense sublime
Of something far more deeply interfused,
Whose dwelling is the light of setting suns,
And the round ocean, and the living air,
100 And the blue sky, and in the mind of man,
A motion and a spirit, that impels
All thinking things, all objects of all thought,
And rolls through all things. Therefore am I still
A lover of the meadows and the woods,
And mountains; and of all that we behold
From this green earth; of all the mighty world
Of eye and ear, both what they half-create,
And what perceive; well pleased to recognize
In nature and the language of the sense,
110 The anchor of my purest thoughts, the nurse,
The guide, the guardian of my heart, and soul
Of all my moral being.

Nor, perchance,

If I were not thus taught, should I the more
Suffer my genial spirits to decay:
For thou art with me, here, upon the banks
Of this fair river; thou, my dearest Friend,
My dear, dear Friend, and in thy voice I catch
The language of my former heart, and read
My former pleasures in the shooting lights 120 Of thy wild eyes. Oh! yet a little while May I behold in thee what I was once,
My dear, dear Sister! And this prayer I make,
Knowing that Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her; 'tis her privilege,
Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy: for she can so inform
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietness and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues, 130 Rash judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of daily life,
Shall e'er prevail against us, or disturb
Our chearful faith that all which we behold
Is full of blessings. Therefore let the moon
Shine on thee in thy solitary walk;
And let the misty mountain winds be free
To blow against thee: and in after years,
When these wild ecstasies shall be matured
140 Into a sober pleasure, when thy mind
Shall be a mansion for all lovely forms,
Thy memory be as a dwelling-place
For all sweet sounds and harmonies; Oh! then,

If solitude, or fear, or pain, or grief,
Should be thy portion, with what healing thoughts
Of tender joy wilt thou remember me,
And these my exhortations! Nor, perchance,
If I should be, where I no more can hear
Thy voice, nor catch from thy wild eyes these gleams
150 Of past existence, wilt thou then forget
That on the banks of this delightful stream
We stood together; and that I, so long
A worshipper of Nature, hither came,
Unwearied in that service: rather say
With warmer love, oh! with far deeper zeal
Of holier love. Nor wilt thou then forget,
That after many wanderings, many years
Of absence, these steep woods and lofty cliffs,
And this green pastoral landscape, were to me
160 More dear, both for themselves, and for thy sake.

The Fountain A Conversation

We talked with open heart, and tongue

Affectionate and true,
A pair of Friends, though I was young,
And Matthew seventy-two.

We lay beneath a spreading oak,

Beside a mossy seat,
And from the turf a fountain broke,
And gurgled at our feet.

Now, Matthew, let us try to match

10 This water's pleasant tune
With some old Border-song, or catch
That suits a summer's noon.

Or of the Church-clock and the chimes

Sing here beneath the shade,
That half-mad thing of witty rhymes
Which you last April made!

In silence Matthew lay, and eyed

The spring beneath the tree;
And thus the dear old Man replied,
20 The grey-haired Man of glee.

‘Down to the vale this water steers,

How merrily it goes!
’Twill murmur on a thousand years,
And flow as now it flows.

And here, on this delightful day,

I cannot chuse but think
How oft, a vigorous Man, I lay
Beside this Fountain's brink.

My eyes are dim with childish tears,

30 My heart is idly stirred,
For the same sound is in my ears,
Which in those days I heard.

Thus fares it still in our decay:

And yet the wiser mind
Mourns less for what age takes away
Than what it leaves behind.

The blackbird in the summer trees,

The lark upon the hill,
Let loose their carols when they please,
40 Are quiet when they will.

With Nature never do they wage

A foolish strife; they see
A happy youth, and their old age
Is beautiful and free:

But we are pressed by heavy laws,

And often, glad no more,
We wear a face of joy, because
We have been glad of yore.

If there is one who need bemoan

50 His kindred laid in earth,
The household hearts that were his own,
It is the man of mirth.

My days, my Friend, are almost gone,

My life has been approved,
And many love me, but by none
Am I enough beloved.'

'Now both himself and me he wrongs,

The man who thus complains!
I live and sing my idle songs
60 Upon these happy plains,

And, Matthew, for thy Children dead

I'll be a son to thee!’
At this he grasped his hands, and said, ‘Alas! that cannot be.’

We rose up from the fountain-side,

And down the smooth descent
Of the green sheep-track did we glide,
And through the wood we went,

And, ere we came to Leonard's Rock,

70 He sang those witty rhymes
About the crazy old church-clock
And the bewildered chimes.

The Two April Mornings

We walked along, while bright and red

Uprose the morning sun,
And Matthew stopped, he looked, and said,
‘The will of God be done!’

A village Schoolmaster was he,

With hair of glittering grey;
As blithe a man as you could see
On a spring holiday.

And on that morning, through the grass,

10 And by the steaming rills,
We travelled merrily to pass
A day among the hills.

‘Our work,’ said I, ‘was well begun;

Then, from thy breast what thought,
Beneath so beautiful a sun,
So sad a sigh has brought?’

A second time did Matthew stop,

And fixing still his eye
Upon the eastern mountain-top
20 To me he made reply.

‘Yon cloud with that long purple cleft

Brings fresh into my mind
A day like this which I have left
Full thirty years behind.

And on that slope of springing corn

The self-same crimson hue
Fell from the sky that April morn,
The same which now I view!

With rod and line my silent sport

30 I plied by Derwent's wave,
And, coming to the church, stopped short
Beside my Daughter's grave.

Nine summers had she scarcely seen

The pride of all the vale;
And then she sang! – she would have been A very nightingale.

Six feet in earth my Emma lay,

And yet I loved her more,
For so it seemed, than till that day
40 I e'er had loved before.

And, turning from her grave, I met

Beside the church-yard Yew
A blooming Girl, whose hair was wet
With points of morning dew.

A basket on her head she bare,

Her brow was smooth and white,
To see a Child so very fair,
It was a pure delight!

No fountain from its rocky cave

50 E'er tripped with foot so free,
She seemed as happy as a wave
That dances on the sea.

There came from me a sigh of pain

Which I could ill confine;
I looked at her and looked again;
– And did not wish her mine.'

Matthew is in his grave, yet now

Methinks I see him stand,
As at that moment, with his bough

60 Of wilding in his hand.

‘A slumber did my spirit seal’

A slumber did my spirit seal;
I had no human fears:
She seemed a thing that could not feel
The touch of earthly years.

No motion has she now, no force;
She neither hears nor sees,
Rolled round in earth's diurnal course
With rocks and stones and trees.

Song

She dwelt among th' untrodden ways

Beside the springs of Dove,

A Maid whom there were none to praise

And very few to love.

A Violet by a mossy stone

Half-hidden from the Eye!

– Fair, as a star when only one

Is shining in the sky!

She lived unknown, and few could know

10

When Lucy ceased to be;

But she is in her Grave, and Oh!

The difference to me.

‘Strange fits of passion I have known’

Strange fits of passion I have known,

And I will dare to tell,
But in the lover's ear alone,
What once to me befel.

When she I loved, was strong and gay

And like a rose in June,
I to her cottage bent my way,
Beneath the evening moon.

Upon the moon I fixed my eye

10 All over the wide lea;
My horse trudged on, and we drew nigh
Those paths so dear to me.

And now we reached the orchard plot,

And, as we climbed the hill,
Towards the roof of Lucy's cot
The moon descended still.

In one of those sweet dreams I slept,

Kind Nature's gentlest boon!

And, all the while, my eyes I kept

20 On the descending moon.

My horse moved on; hoof after hoof

He raised and never stopped:

When down behind the cottage roof

At once the planet dropped.

What fond and wayward thoughts will slide

Into a Lover's head –

‘O mercy!’ to myself I cried,

‘If Lucy should be dead!’

Lucy Gray

Oft had I heard of Lucy Gray,

And when I crossed the Wild,
I chanced to see at break of day
The solitary Child.

No Mate, no comrade Lucy knew;

She dwelt on a wide Moor,
The sweetest Thing that ever grew
Beside a human door!

You yet may spy the Fawn at play,

10 The Hare upon the Green;
But the sweet face of Lucy Gray
Will never more be seen.

‘To-night will be a stormy night,

You to the Town must go,
And take a lantern, Child, to light
Your Mother thro' the snow.’

‘That, Father! will I gladly do;

'Tis scarcely afternoon –
The Minster-clock has just struck two,
20 And yonder is the Moon.’

At this the Father raised his hook

And snapped a faggot-band;
He plied his work, and Lucy took
The lantern in her hand.

Not blither is the mountain roe,

With many a wanton stroke
Her feet disperse the powd'ry snow
That rises up like smoke.
The storm came on before its time,
30 She wandered up and down,
And many a hill did Lucy climb
But never reached the Town.

The wretched Parents all that night

Went shouting far and wide;
But there was neither sound nor sight
To serve them for a guide.

At day-break on a hill they stood

That overlooked the Moor;
And thence they saw the Bridge of Wood 40 A furlong from their door.

And now they homeward turned, and cried

‘In Heaven we all shall meet!’
When in the snow the Mother spied
The print of Lucy's feet.

Then downward from the steep hill's edge

They tracked the footmarks small;
And through the broken hawthorn-hedge,
And by the long stone-wall;

And then an open field they crossed,

50 The marks were still the same;
They tracked them on, nor ever lost,
And to the Bridge they came.

They followed from the snowy bank

The footmarks, one by one,
Into the middle of the plank,
And further there were none.

Yet some maintain that to this day

She is a living Child,
That you may see sweet Lucy Gray
60 Upon the lonesome Wild.

O'er rough and smooth she trips along,

And never looks behind;
And sings a solitary song
That whistles in the wind.

Nutting

———It seems a day,

One of those heavenly days which cannot die,
When forth I sallied from our cottage-door,
And with a wallet o'er my shoulder slung,
A nutting crook in hand, I turned my steps
Towards the distant woods, a Figure quaint,
Tricked out in proud disguise of Beggar's weeds
Put on for the occasion, by advice
And exhortation of my frugal Dame.

10 Motley accoutrements! of power to smile
At thorns, and brakes, and brambles, and, in truth,
More ragged than need was. Among the woods,
And o'er the pathless rocks, I forced my way
Until, at length, I came to one dear nook
Unvisited, where not a broken bough
Drooped with its withered leaves, ungracious sign
Of devastation, but the hazels rose
Tall and erect, with milk-white clusters hung,
A virgin scene! – A little while I stood,
20 Breathing with such suppression of the heart
As joy delights in; and with wise restraint
Voluptuous, fearless of a rival, eyed
The banquet, or beneath the trees I sate
Among the flowers, and with the flowers I played;
A temper known to those, who, after long

And weary expectation, have been blessed
With sudden happiness beyond all hope. –
– Perhaps it was a bower beneath whose leaves
The violets of five seasons re-appear
30 And fade, unseen by any human eye,
Where fairy water-breaks do murmur on
For ever, and I saw the sparkling foam,
And with my cheek on one of those green stones
That, fleeced with moss, beneath the shady trees,
Lay round me scattered like a flock of sheep,
I heard the murmur and the murmuring sound
In that sweet mood when pleasure loves to pay Tribute to ease, and, of its joy secure
The heart luxuriates with indifferent things,
Wasting its kindliness on stocks and stones,
40 And on the vacant air. Then up I rose,
And dragged to earth both branch and bough, with crash
And merciless ravage; and the shady nook
Of hazels, and the green and mossy bower,
Deformed and sullied, patiently gave up
Their quiet being; and unless I now
Confound my present feelings with the past
Even then, when from the bower I turned away,
Exulting, rich beyond the wealth of kings
50 I felt a sense of pain when I beheld

The silent trees and the intruding sky. –

Then, dearest Maiden! move along these shades

In gentleness of heart; with gentle hand
Touch, – for there is a Spirit in the woods.

‘Three years she grew in sun and shower’

Three years she grew in sun and shower,

Then Nature said, ‘A lovelier flower
On earth was never sown;
This Child I to myself will take,
She shall be mine, and I will make A Lady of my own.

Myself will to my darling be

Both law and impulse, and with me
The Girl in rock and plain,
10 In earth and heaven, in glade and bower,
Shall feel an overseeing power
To kindle or restrain.

She shall be sportive as the fawn

That wild with glee across the lawn
Or up the mountain springs,
And hers shall be the breathing balm,
And hers the silence and the calm
Of mute insensate things.

The floating clouds their state shall lend

20 To her, for her the willow bend,
Nor shall she fail to see
Even in the motions of the storm
A beauty that shall mould her form
By silent sympathy.

The stars of midnight shall be dear

To her, and she shall lean her ear
In many a secret place
Where rivulets dance their wayward round,
And beauty born of murmuring sound
30 Shall pass into her face

And vital feelings of delight

Shall rear her form to stately height,
Her virgin bosom swell,
Such thoughts to Lucy I will give While she and I together live
Here in this happy dell.'

Thus Nature spake – The work was done –

How soon my Lucy's race was run!
She died and left to me
40 This heath, this calm and quiet scene,
The memory of what has been,
And never more will be.

The Brothers

These Tourists, Heaven preserve us! needs must live

A profitable life: some glance along,
Rapid and gay, as if the earth were air,
And they were butterflies to wheel about
Long as their summer lasted; some as wise
Upon the forehead of a jutting crag
Sit perched with book and pencil on their knee,
And look and scribble, scribble on and look,
Until a man might travel twelve stout miles,
10 Or reap an acre of his neighbour's corn.
But, for that moping son of Idleness
Why can he tarry yonder? – In our church-yard
Is neither epitaph nor monument,
Tomb-stone nor name, only the turf we tread,
And a few natural graves. To Jane, his Wife,
Thus spake the homely Priest of Ennerdale.
It was a July evening, and he sate
Upon the long stone-seat beneath the eaves
Of his old cottage, as it chanced that day,
20 Employed in winter's work. Upon the stone
His Wife sate near him, teasing matted wool,
While, from the twin cards toothed with glittering wire,
He fed the spindle of his youngest child,
Who turned her large round wheel in the open air
With back and forward steps. Towards the field

In which the parish chapel stood alone,
Girt round with a bare ring of mossy wall,
While half an hour went by, the Priest had sent
Many a long look of wonder; and at last,
30 Risen from his seat, beside the snowy ridge
Of carded wool which the old Man had piled
He laid his implements with gentle care,
Each in the other locked; and, down the path
Which from his cottage to the church-yard led,
He took his way, impatient to accost
The Stranger, whom he saw still lingering there.

'Twas one well known to him in former days,

A Shepherd-lad: who ere his thirteenth year
Had changed his calling, with the mariners 40 A fellow-mariner, and so had fared
Through twenty seasons; but he had been reared
Among the mountains, and he in his heart
Was half a Shepherd on the stormy seas.
Oft in the piping shrouds had Leonard heard
The tones of waterfalls, and inland sounds
Of caves and trees; and when the regular wind
Between the tropics filled the steady sail
And blew with the same breath through days and weeks,
Lengthening invisibly its weary line
50 Along the cloudless main, he, in those hours
Of tiresome indolence would often hang
Over the vessel's side, and gaze and gaze,
And, while the broad green wave and sparkling foam
Flashed round him images and hues, that wrought
In union with the employment of his heart,
He, thus by feverish passion overcome,
Even with the organs of his bodily eye,

Below him, in the bosom of the deep,
Saw mountains, saw the forms of sheep that grazed 60 On verdant hills, with dwellings among trees,
And Shepherds clad in the same country grey

Which he himself had worn.

And now at length,

From perils manifold, with some small wealth
Acquired by traffic in the Indian Isles,
To his paternal home he is returned,
With a determined purpose to resume
The life which he lived there, both for the sake
Of many darling pleasures, and the love
Which to an only brother he has borne
70 In all his hardships, since that happy time
When, whether it blew foul or fair, they two Were brother Shepherds on their native hills.
– They were the last of all their race; and now,
When Leonard had approached his home, his heart
Failed in him, and, not venturing to inquire
Tidings of one whom he so dearly loved,
Towards the church-yard he had turned aside,
That, as he knew in what particular spot
His family were laid, he thence might learn
80 If still his Brother lived, or to the file
Another grave was added. – He had found
Another grave, near which a full half hour
He had remained, but, as he gazed, there grew
Such a confusion in his memory,
That he began to doubt, and he had hopes
That he had seen this heap of turf before,
That it was not another grave, but one,

He had forgotten. He had lost his path,
As up the vale he came that afternoon,
90 Through fields which once had been well known to him.
And Oh! what joy the recollection now
Sent to his heart! he lifted up his eyes,
And looking round he thought that he perceived
Strange alteration wrought on every side
Among the woods and fields, and that the rocks,

And the eternal hills, themselves were changed.

By this the Priest who down the field had come

Unseen by Leonard, at the church-yard gate
Stopped short, and thence, at leisure, limb by limb 100 He scanned him with a gay complacency.
Aye, thought the Vicar, smiling to himself,
'Tis one of those who needs must leave the path
Of the world's business, to go wild alone:
His arms have a perpetual holiday,
The happy man will creep about the fields
Following his fancies by the hour, to bring
Tears down his cheek, or solitary smiles
Into his face, until the setting sun
Write Fool upon his forehead. Planted thus 110 Beneath a shed that overarched the gate
Of this rude church-yard, till the stars appeared
The good man might have communed with himself
But that the Stranger, who had left the grave,
Approached; he recognized the Priest at once,
And after greetings interchanged, and given
By Leonard to the Vicar as to one
Unknown to him, this dialogue ensued.

LEONARD

You live, Sir, in these dales, a quiet life:
Your years make up one peaceful family;
120 And who would grieve and fret, if, welcome come
And welcome gone, they are so like each other,
They cannot be remembered. Scarce a funeral
Comes to this church-yard once in eighteen months;
And yet, some changes must take place among you:
And you, who dwell here, even among these rocks
Can trace the finger of mortality,
And see, that with our threescore years and ten
We are not all that perish. – I remember,
For many years ago I passed this road,
130 There was a foot-way all along the fields
By the brook-side – 'tis gone – and that dark cleft!
To me it does not seem to wear the face
Which then it had.

PRIEST

Why, Sir, for aught I know,
That chasm is much the same –

LEONARD

But, surely, yonder –

PRIEST

Aye, there indeed, your memory is a friend
That does not play you false. – On that tall pike, (It is the loneliest place of all these hills)
There were two Springs which bubbled side by side
As if they had been made that they might be 140 Companions for each other: ten years back,
Close to those brother fountains, the huge crag
Was rent with lightning – one is dead and gone,
The other, left behind, is flowing still. –
For accidents and changes such as these,
Why we have store of them! a water-spout
Will bring down half a mountain; what a feast
For folks that wander up and down like you,
To see an acre's breadth of that wide cliff
One roaring cataract – a sharp May storm
150 Will come with loads of January snow,
And in one night send twenty score of sheep
To feed the ravens, or a Shepherd dies
By some untoward death among the rocks:
The ice breaks up and sweeps away a bridge –
A wood is felled: – and then for our own homes!
A child is born or christened, a field ploughed,
A daughter sent to service, a web spun,
The old house clock is decked with a new face;
And hence, so far from wanting facts or dates
160 To chronicle the time, we all have here
A pair of diaries, one serving, Sir,
For the whole dale, and one for each fire-side –
Your's was a stranger's judgment; for historians
Commend me to these vallies.

LEONARD

Yet your church-yard

Seems, if such freedom may be used with you,
To say that you are heedless of the past.
Here's neither head nor foot-stone, plate of brass,
Cross-bones or skull, type of our earthly state
Or emblem of our hopes: the dead man's home
170 Is but a fellow to that pasture field.

PRIEST

Why there, Sir, is a thought that's new to me.
The Stone-cutters, 'tis true, might beg their bread
If every English church-yard were like ours:
Yet your conclusion wanders from the truth.
We have no need of names and epitaphs,
We talk about the dead by our fire-sides.
And then for our immortal part, we want
No symbols, Sir, to tell us that plain tale:
The thought of death sits easy on the man
180 Who has been born and dies among the mountains.

LEONARD

Your dalesmen, then, do in each other's thoughts
Possess a kind of second life: no doubt
You, Sir, could help me to the history
Of half these Graves?

PRIEST

With what I've witnessed, and with what I've heard,
Perhaps I might, and, on a winter's evening,
If you were seated at my chimney's nook
By turning o'er these hillocks one by one,
We two could travel, Sir, through a strange round, 190 Yet all in the broad high-way of the world.
Now there's a grave – your foot is half upon it,
It looks just like the rest, and yet that man
Died broken hearted.

LEONARD

'Tis a common case,
We'll take another: who is he that lies
Beneath yon ridge, the last of those three graves,
It touches on that piece of native rock
Left in the church-yard wall.

PRIEST

That's Walter Ewbank.

He had as white a head and fresh a cheek
As ever were produced by youth and age
200 Engendering in the blood of hale fourscore.
For five long generations had the heart
Of Walter's forefathers o'erflowed the bounds
Of their inheritance, that single cottage,
You see it yonder, and those few green fields.
They toiled and wrought, and still, from sire to son
Each struggled, and each yielded as before
A little – yet a little – and old Walter,
They left to him the family heart, and land
With other burthens than the crop it bore.
210 Year after year the old man still preserved
A chearful mind, and buffeted with bond,
Interest and mortgages; at last he sank,
And went into his grave before his time.
Poor Walter! whether it was care that spurred him
God only knows, but to the very last
He had the lightest foot in Ennerdale:
His pace was never that of an old man:
I almost see him tripping down the path
With his two Grandsons after him – but you, 220 Unless our Landlord be your host to-night,
Have far to travel, and in these rough paths
Even in the longest day of midsummer –

LEONARD

But these two Orphans!

PRIEST

Orphans! such they were –

Yet not while Walter lived – for, though their Parents
Lay buried side by side as now they lie,
The old Man was a father to the boys,
Two fathers in one father: and if tears
Shed, when he talked of them where they were not,
And hauntings from the infirmity of love,
230 Are aught of what makes up a mother's heart,
This old Man in the day of his old age
Was half a mother to them. – If you weep, Sir,
To hear a stranger talking about strangers,
Heaven bless you when you are among your kindred!
Aye. You may turn that way – it is a grave
Which will bear looking at.

LEONARD

These Boys I hope

They loved this good old Man –

PRIEST

They did – and truly,

But that was what we almost overlooked,
They were such darlings of each other. For 240 Though from their cradles they had lived with Walter,
The only kinsman near them in the house,
Yet he being old, they had much love to spare,
And it all went into each other's hearts.
Leonard, the elder by just eighteen months,
Was two years taller: 'twas a joy to see,
To hear, to meet them! from their house the School
Was distant three short miles, and in the time
Of storm and thaw when every water-course
And unbridged stream, such as you may have noticed 250 Crossing our roads at every hundred steps,
Was swoln into a noisy rivulet,
Would Leonard then, when elder boys perhaps Remained at home, go staggering through the fords
Bearing his Brother on his back – I've seen him,
On windy days, in one of those stray brooks,
Aye, more than once I've seen him mid-leg deep,
Their two books lying both on a dry stone
Upon the hither side: – and once I said,
As I remember, looking round these rocks
260 And hills on which we all of us were born,
That God who made the great book of the world
Would bless such piety –

LEONARD

It may be then –

PRIEST

Never did worthier lads break English bread:
The finest Sunday that the Autumn saw,
With all its mealy clusters of ripe nuts,
Could never keep these boys away from church,
Or tempt them to an hour of sabbath breach.
Leonard and James! I warrant, every corner
Among these rocks and every hollow place
270 Where foot could come, to one or both of them
Was known as well as to the flowers that grew there.
Like roe-bucks they went bounding o'er the hills:
They played like two young ravens on the crags:
Then they could write aye and speak too as well
As many of their betters – and for Leonard!
The very night before he went away,
In my own house I put into his hand
A Bible, and I'd wager twenty pounds,
That, if he is alive, he has it yet.

LEONARD

280 It seems, these Brothers have not lived to be A comfort to each other. –

PRIEST

That they might
Live to that end, is what both old and young
In this our valley all of us have wished,
And what, for my part, I have often prayed:
But Leonard –

LEONARD

Then James still is left among you –

PRIEST

'Tis of the elder Brother I am speaking:
They had an Uncle, he was at that time
A thriving man, and trafficked on the seas:
And, but for this same Uncle, to this hour
290 Leonard had never handled rope or shroud.
For the Boy loved the life which we lead here;
And, though a very Stripling, twelve years old;
His soul was knit to this his native soil.
But, as I said, old Walter was too weak
To strive with such a torrent; when he died,
The estate and house were sold, and all their sheep,
A pretty flock, and which, for aught I know,
Had clothed the Ewbanks for a thousand years.
Well – all was gone, and they were destitute.
300 And Leonard, chiefly for his brother's sake,
Resolved to try his fortune on the seas.
'Tis now twelve years since we had tidings from him.
If there was one among us who had heard
That Leonard Ewbank was come home again,
From the great Gavel, down by Leeza's Banks,
And down the Enna, far as Egremont,
The day would be a very festival,
And those two bells of ours, which there you see
Hanging in the open air – but, O good Sir!
310 This is sad talk – they'll never sound for him
Living or dead – When last we heard of him
He was in slavery among the Moors
Upon the Barbary Coast – 'Twas not a little
That would bring down his spirit, and, no doubt,
Before it ended in his death, the Lad
Was sadly crossed – Poor Leonard! when we parted,
He took me by the hand and said to me,

If ever the day came when he was rich,
He would return, and on his Father's Land
He would grow old among us.

LEONARD

320

If that day

Should come, 'twould needs be a glad day for him;
He would himself, no doubt, be as happy then
As any that should meet him –

PRIEST

Happy, Sir –

LEONARD

You said his kindred all were in their graves,
And that he had one Brother –

PRIEST

That is but
A fellow tale of sorrow. From his youth
James, though not sickly, yet was delicate,
And Leonard being always by his side
Had done so many offices about him,

330 That, though he was not of a timid nature,
Yet still the spirit of a mountain boy
In him was somewhat checked, and when his Brother
Was gone to sea and he was left alone
The little colour that he had was soon
Stolen from his cheek, he drooped, and pined and pined:

LEONARD

But these are all the graves of full grown men!

PRIEST

Aye, Sir, that passed away: we took him to us.
He was the child of all the dale – he lived
Three months with one, and six months with another:
340 And wanted neither food, nor clothes, nor love,
And many, many happy days were his.
But whether blithe or sad 'tis my belief
His absent Brother still was at his heart.
And, when he lived beneath our roof, we found
(A practice till this time unknown to him)
That often, rising from his bed at night,
He in his sleep would walk about, and sleeping
He sought his Brother Leonard – You are moved!
Forgive me, Sir: before I spoke to you,
I judged you most unkindly.

LEONARD

350

But this youth,

How did he die at last?

PRIEST

One sweet May morning,

It will be twelve years since, when Spring returns,
He had gone forth among the new-dropped lambs,
With two or three companions whom it chanced
Some further business summoned to a house
Which stands at the Dale-head. James, tired perhaps,
Or from some other cause remained behind.
You see yon precipice – it almost looks
Like some vast building made of many crags,
360 And in the midst is one particular rock
That rises like a column from the vale,
Whence by our Shepherds it is called, the Pillar.
James, pointing to its summit, over which
They all had purposed to return together,
Informed them that he there would wait for them:
They parted, and his comrades passed that way
Some two hours after, but they did not find him
At the appointed place, a circumstance
Of which they took no heed: but one of them,
370 Going by chance, at night, into the house
Which at this time was James's home, there learned
That nobody had seen him all that day:
The morning came, and still, he was unheard of:
The neighbours were alarmed, and to the Brook
Some went, and some towards the Lake; ere noon
They found him at the foot of that same Rock
Dead, and with mangled limbs. The third day after I buried him, poor lad, and there he lies.

LEONARD

And that then is his grave! – Before his death 380 You said that he saw many happy years?

PRIEST

Aye, that he did –

LEONARD

And all went well with him –

PRIEST

If he had one, the Lad had twenty homes.

LEONARD

And you believe then, that his mind was easy –

PRIEST

Yes, long before he died, he found that time
Is a true friend to sorrow, and unless
His thoughts were turned on Leonard's luckless fortune,
He talked about him with a chearful love.

LEONARD

He could not come to an unhallowed end!

PRIEST

Nay, God forbid! You recollect I mentioned
390 A habit which disquietude and grief
Had brought upon him, and we all conjectured
That, as the day was warm, he had lain down
Upon the grass, and, waiting for his comrades
He there had fallen asleep, that in his sleep
He to the margin of the precipice
Had walked, and from the summit had fallen

head-long,

And so no doubt he perished: at the time,
We guess, that in his hands he must have had
His Shepherd's staff; for midway in the cliff
400 It had been caught, and there for many years
It hung – and mouldered there.

The Priest here ended.

The Stranger would have thanked him, but he felt
Tears rushing in; both left the spot in silence,
And Leonard, when they reached the church-yard gate,
As the Priest lifted up the latch, turned round,
And, looking at the grave, he said, 'My Brother'.
The Vicar did not hear the words: and now,
Pointing towards the Cottage, he entreated
That Leonard would partake his homely fare:
410 The other thanked him with a fervent voice,
But added, that, the evening being calm,
He would pursue his journey. So they parted.

It was not long ere Leonard reached a grove

That overhung the road: he there stopped short,
And, sitting down beneath the trees, reviewed
All that the Priest had said: his early years
Were with him in his heart: his cherished hopes,
And thoughts which had been his an hour before,
All pressed on him with such a weight, that now, 420 This vale, where he had been so happy, seemed
A place in which he could not bear to live:
So he relinquished all his purposes.
He travelled on to Egremont; and thence,
That night, addressed a letter to the Priest
Reminding him of what had passed between them;
And adding, with a hope to be forgiven,
That it was from the weakness of his heart,
He had not dared to tell him, who he was.

This done, he went on shipboard, and is now

430 A Seaman, a grey headed Mariner.

Hart-Leap Well

Hart-Leap Well is a small spring of water, about five miles from Richmond in Yorkshire, and near the side of the road which leads from Richmond to Askrigg. Its name is derived from a remarkable chace, the memory of which is preserved by the monuments spoken of in the second Part of the following Poem, which monuments do now exist as I have there described them.

The Knight had ridden down from Wensley moor

With the slow motion of a summer's cloud;
He turned aside towards a Vassal's door,
And, 'Bring another Horse!' he cried aloud.

'Another Horse!' – That shout the Vassal heard,

And saddled his best steed, a comely Grey;
Sir Walter mounted him; he was the third
Which he had mounted on that glorious day.

Joy sparkled in the prancing Courser's eyes,

10 The horse and horseman are a happy pair;
But, though Sir Walter like a falcon flies,
There is a doleful silence in the air.

A rout this morning left Sir Walter's Hall,

That as they galloped made the echoes roar;
But horse and man are vanished, one and all;
Such race, I think, was never seen before

Sir Walter, restless as a veering wind,

Calls to the few tired dogs that yet remain:
Brach, Swift and Music, noblest of their kind,
20 Follow, and weary up the mountain strain.

The Knight hallooed, he chid and cheered them on

With suppliant gestures and upbraidings stern;
But breath and eye-sight fail, and, one by one,
The dogs are stretched among the mountain fern.

Where is the throng, the tumult of the chace?

The bugles that so joyfully were blown?
– This race it looks not like an earthly race;
Sir Walter and the Hart are left alone.

The poor Hart toils along the mountain side;

30 I will not stop to tell how far he fled,
Nor will I mention by what death he died;
But now the Knight beholds him lying dead.

Dismounting then, he leaned against a thorn;

He had no follower, dog, nor man, nor boy:

He neither smacked his whip, nor blew his horn,
But gazed upon the spoil with silent joy.

Close to the thorn on which Sir Walter leaned,

Stood his dumb partner in this glorious act;
Weak as a lamb the hour that it is yeaned,
40 And foaming like a mountain cataract.

Upon his side the Hart was lying stretched:

His nose half-touched a spring beneath a hill,
And with the last deep groan his breath had fetched
The waters of the spring were trembling still.

And now, too happy for repose or rest,

Was never man in such a joyful case,
Sir Walter walked all around, north, south and west,
And gazed, and gazed upon that darling place.

And turning up the hill, it was at least

50 Nine roods of sheer ascent, Sir Walter found
Three several marks which with his hoofs the beast
Had left imprinted on the verdant ground.

Sir Walter wiped his face, and cried, 'Till now

Such sight was never seen by living eyes:
Three leaps have borne him from this lofty brow,
Down to the very fountain where he lies.

I'll build a Pleasure-house upon this spot,

And a small Arbour, made for rural joy;
'Twill be the traveller's shed, the pilgrim's cot
60 A place of love for damsels that are coy.

A cunning Artist will I have to frame

A bason for that fountain in the dell;
And they, who do make mention of the same,
From this day forth, shall call it Hart-leap Well.

And, gallant brute, to make thy praises known,

Another monument shall here be raised;
Three several pillars, each a rough hewn stone,
And planted where thy hoofs the turf have grazed.

And in the summer-time when days are long,

70 I will come hither with my paramour,
And with the dancers, and the minstrel's song,
We will make merry in that pleasant bower.

Till the foundations of the mountains fail

My mansion with its arbour shall endure,
– The joy of them who till the fields of Swale,
And them who dwell among the woods of Ure.'

Then home he went, and left the Hart, stone-dead,

With breathless nostrils stretched above the spring.
And soon the Knight performed what he had said, 80 The fame whereof through many a land did ring.

Ere thrice the moon into her port had steered,

A cup of stone received the living well;
Three pillars of rude stone Sir Walter reared,
And built a house of pleasure in the dell.

And near the fountain, flowers of stature tall,

With trailing plants and trees were intertwined,
Which soon composed a little sylvan hall,
A leafy shelter from the sun and wind.

And thither, when the summer days were long,

90 Sir Walter journeyed with his paramour;
And with the dancers and the minstrel's song
Made merriment within that pleasant bower.

The Knight, Sir Walter, died in course of time,

And his bones lie in his paternal vale.
But there is matter for a second rhyme,
And I to this would add another tale.

Part Second

The moving accident is not my trade,
To curl the blood I have no ready arts;
'Tis my delight, alone in summer shade,
100 To pipe a simple song to thinking hearts.

As I from Hawes to Richmond did repair,

It chanced that I saw standing in a dell
Three aspens at three corners of a square,
And one, not four yards distant, near a well.

What this imported I could ill divine,

And, pulling now the rein my horse to stop,
I saw three pillars standing in a line,
The last stone pillar on a dark hill-top.

The trees were grey, with neither arms nor head;

110 Half-wasted the square mound of tawny green;
So that you just might say, as then I said,
'Here in old time the hand of man has been.'

I looked upon the hills both far and near;

More doleful place did never eye survey;
It seemed as if the spring-time came not here,
And Nature here were willing to decay.

I stood in various thoughts and fancies lost,

When one who was in Shepherd's garb attired,
Came up the hollow. Him did I accost,
And what this place might be I then inquired.

The Shepherd stopped, and that same story told

Which in my former rhyme I have rehearsed.
'A jolly place,' said he, 'in times of old,
120 But something ails it now; the spot is cursed.

You see these lifeless stumps of aspin wood,

Some say they are beeches, others elms,
These were the Bower; and here a Mansion stood,
The finest palace of a hundred realms.

The arbour does its own condition tell,

You see the stones, the fountain, and the stream,
But as to the great Lodge, you might as well
Hunt half a day for a forgotten dream.

There's neither dog nor heifer, horse nor sheep,

130 Will wet his lips within that cup of stone;
And, oftentimes, when all are fast asleep,
This water doth send forth a dolorous groan.

Some say that here a murder has been done

And blood cries out for blood: but, for my part,
I've guessed, when I've been sitting in the sun,
That it was all for that unhappy Hart.

What thoughts must through the creature's brain have passed!

To this place from the stone upon the steep
Are but three bounds, and look, Sir, at this last!
140 O Master! it has been a cruel leap.

For thirteen hours he ran a desperate race;

And in my simple mind we cannot tell
What cause the Hart might have to love this place,
And come and make his death-bed near the well.

Here on the grass perhaps asleep he sank,

Lulled by this fountain in the summer-tide;
This water was perhaps the first he drank
When he had wandered from his mother's side.

In April here beneath the scented thorn

150 He heard the birds their morning carols sing,
And he, perhaps, for aught we know, was born
Not half a furlong from that self-same spring.

But now here's neither grass nor pleasant shade;

The sun on drearier hollow never shone:
So will it be, as I have often said,

Till trees, and stones, and fountain all are gone.'

'Grey-headed Shepherd, thou hast spoken well;

Small difference lies between thy creed and mine;
This beast not unobserved by Nature fell,
160 His death was mourned by sympathy divine.

The Being, that is in the clouds and air,

That is in the green leaves among the groves,
Maintains a deep and reverential care
For them the quiet creatures whom he loves.

The Pleasure-house is dust: – behind, before,

This is no common waste, no common gloom;
But Nature, in due course of time, once more
Shall here put on her beauty and her bloom.

She leaves these objects to a slow decay

170 That what we are, and have been, may be known;
But, at the coming of the milder day,
These monuments shall all be overgrown.

One lesson, Shepherd, let us two divide,

Taught both by what she shews, and what conceals,
Never to blend our pleasure or our pride
With sorrow of the meanest thing that feels.'

from Home at Grasmere

Once on the brow of yonder Hill I stopped

While I was yet a School-boy (of what age
I cannot well remember, but the hour
I well remember though the year be gone),
And, with a sudden influx overcome
At sight of this seclusion, I forgot
My haste, for hasty had my footsteps been
As boyish my pursuits; and sighing said,
'What happy fortune were it here to live!
10 And if I thought of dying, if a thought
Of mortal separation could come in
With paradise before me, here to die.'
I was no Prophet, nor had even a hope,
Scarcely a wish, but one bright pleasing thought,
A fancy in the heart of what might be
The lot of others, never could be mine.

The place from which I looked was soft and green,

Not giddy yet aerial, with a depth
Of Vale below, a height of Hills above.
20 Long did I halt; I could have made it even My business and my errand so to halt.
For rest of body 'twas a perfect place,
All that luxurious nature could desire,

But tempting to the Spirit; who could look
And not feel motions there? I thought of clouds
That sail on winds; of breezes that delight
To play on water, or in endless chase
Pursue each other through the liquid depths
Of grass or corn, over and through and through, 30 In billow after billow, evermore;
Of Sunbeams, Shadows, Butterflies and Birds,
Angels and winged Creatures that are Lords
Without restraint of all which they behold.
I sate and stirred in Spirit as I looked,
I seemed to feel such liberty was mine,
Such power and joy; but only for this end,
To flit from field to rock, from rock to field,
From shore to island, and from isle to shore,
From open place to covert, from a bed
40 Of meadow-flowers into a tuft of wood,
From high to low, from low to high, yet still Within the bounds of this huge Concave; here
Should be my home, this Valley be my World.
From that time forward was the place to me
As beautiful in thought, as it had been
When present to my bodily eyes; a haunt
Of my affections, oftentimes in joy
A brighter joy, in sorrow (but of that I have known little) in such gloom, at least,
50 Such damp of the gay mind as stood to me
In place of sorrow, 'twas a gleam of light.
And now 'tis mine for life: dear Vale,
One of thy lowly dwellings is my home!

.....

What wonder if I speak

With fervour, am exalted with the thought

90 Of my possessions, of my genuine wealth
Inward and outward? What I keep, have gained,
Shall gain, must gain, if sound be my belief
From past and present, rightly understood,
That in my day of childhood I was less
The mind of Nature, less, take all in all,
Whatever may be lost, than I am now.
For proof behold this Valley, and behold
Yon Cottage, where with me my Emma dwells.

Aye, think on that, my Heart, and cease to stir,

100 Pause upon that, and let the breathing frame
No longer breathe, but all be satisfied.
Oh, if such silence be not thanks to God
For what hath been bestowed, then where, where then Shall gratitude find rest? Mine eyes did ne'er
Rest on a lovely object, nor my mind
Take pleasure in the midst of happy thoughts,
But either She whom now I have, who now
Divides with me this loved abode, was there,
Or not far off. Where'er my footsteps turned,
110 Her Voice was like a hidden Bird that sang;
The thought of her was like a flash of light
Or an unseen companionship, a breath
Or fragrance independent of the wind;
In all my goings, in the new and old
Of all my meditations, and in this Favorite of all, in this the most of all.
What Being, therefore, since the birth of Man
Had ever more abundant cause to speak
Thanks, and if music and the power of song 120 Make him more thankful, then to call on these
To aid him, and with these resound his joy.
The boon is absolute; surpassing grace

To me hath been vouchsafed; among the bowers
Of blissful Eden this was neither given,
Nor could be given, possession of the good
Which had been sighed for, antient thought fulfilled
And dear Imaginations realized,
Up to their highest measure, yea, and more.

Embrace me, then, ye Hills, and close me in,

130 Now in the clear and open day I feel
Your guardianship; I take it to my heart;
'Tis like the solemn shelter of the night.
But I would call thee beautiful, for mild,
And soft, and gay, and beautiful thou art,
Dear Valley, having in thy face a smile
Though peaceful, full of gladness. Thou art pleased,
Pleased with thy crags, and woody steeps, thy Lake,
Its one green Island and its winding shores,
The multitude of little rocky hills,
140 Thy Church and Cottages of mountain stone –
Clustered like stars, some few, but single most,
And lurking dimly in their shy retreats,
Or glancing at each other chearful looks,
Like separated stars with clouds between.
What want we? Have we not perpetual streams,
Warm woods, and sunny hills, and fresh green fields,
And mountains not less green, and flocks and herds,
And thickets full of songsters, and the voice
Of lordly birds – an unexpected sound
150 Heard now and then from morn to latest eve, Admonishing the man who walks below
Of solitude and silence in the sky?
These have we, and a thousand nooks of earth
Have also these, but no where else is found –
No where (or is it fancy?) can be found –

The one sensation that is here; 'tis here,
Here as it found its way into my heart
In childhood, here as it abides by day,
By night, here only; or in chosen minds
160 That take it with them hence, where'er they go.
'Tis (but I cannot name it) 'tis the sense
Of majesty, and beauty, and repose,
A blended holiness of earth and sky,
Something that makes this individual Spot,
This small abiding-place of many men,
A termination, and a last retreat,
A Centre, come from wheresoe'er you will,
A Whole without dependence or defect,
Made for itself, and happy in itself, 170 Perfect Contentment, Unity entire.
.....

But the gates of Spring

Are opened; churlish Winter hath giv'n leave
That she should entertain for this one day, 280 Perhaps for many genial days to come,
His guests, and make them happy. They are pleased,
But most of all the birds that haunt the flood,
With the mild summons; inmates though they be
Of Winter's household: they are jubilant
This day, who drooped, or seemed to droop, so long;
They shew their pleasure, and shall I do less?
Happier of happy though I be, like them
I cannot take possession of the sky,
Mount with a thoughtless impulse and wheel there
290 One of a mighty multitude, whose way
And motion is a harmony and dance
Magnificent. Behold them, how they shape
Orb after orb their course still round and round

Above the area of the Lake, their own
Adopted region, girding it about
In wanton repetition, yet therewith
With that large circle evermore renewed:
Hundreds of curves and circlets high and low,
Backwards and forwards, progress intricate,
300 As if one spirit was in all and swayed
Their indefatigable flight. 'Tis done,
Ten times or more I fancied it had ceased,
And lo! the vanished company again
Ascending, – list again – I hear their wings
Faint, faint at first; and then an eager sound
Passed in a moment – and as faint again!
They tempt the sun to sport among their plumes;
They tempt the water, and the gleaming ice,
To shew them a fair image, – 'tis themselves,
310 Their own fair forms, upon the glimm'ring plain,
Painted more soft and fair as they descend,
Almost to touch, – then up again aloft,
Up with a sally and a flash of speed,
As if they scorned both resting-place and rest.
Spring! for this day belongs to thee, rejoice!
Not upon me alone hath been bestowed,
Me blessed with many onward-looking thoughts,
The sunshine and mild air; oh surely these
Are grateful, not the happy Quires of love,
320 Thine own peculiar family, Sweet Spring,
That sport among green leaves so blithe a train.

But two are missing – two, a lonely pair

Of milk-white Swans – ah, why are they not here?
These above all, ah, why are they not here
To share in this day's pleasure? From afar
They came, like Emma and myself, to live

Together here in peace and solitude,
Chusing this Valley, they who had the choice
Of the whole world. We saw them day by day, 330 Through those two months of unrelenting storm,
Conspicuous in the centre of the Lake,
Their safe retreat; we knew them well – I guess
That the whole Valley knew them – but to us
They were more dear than may be well believed,
Not only for their beauty and their still
And placid way of life and faithful love
Inseparable, not for these alone,
But that their state so much resembled ours,
They also having chosen this abode;
340 They strangers, and we strangers; they a pair,
And we a solitary pair like them.
They should not have departed; many days
I've looked for them in vain, nor on the wing
Have seen them, nor in that small open space
Of blue unfrozen water, where they lodged,
And lived so long in quiet, side by side.
Companions, brethren, consecrated friends,
Shall we behold them yet another year
Surviving, they for us, and we for them,
350 And neither pair be broken? – nay, perchance
It is too late already for such hope;
The Shepherd may have seized the deadly tube,
And parted them, incited by the prize
Which for the sake of those he loves at home
And for the Lamb upon the mountain tops,
He should have spared; or haply both are gone,
One death, and that were mercy giv'n to both.
.....

An awful voice,

'Tis true, I in my walks have often heard,
Sent from the mountains or the sheltered fields,
410 Shout after shout – reiterated whoop
In manner of a bird that takes delight
In answering to itself, or like a hound
Single at chace among the lonely woods –
A human voice, how awful in the gloom
Of coming night, when sky is dark, and earth
Not dark, nor yet enlightened, but by snow
Made visible, amid the noise of winds
And bleatings manifold of sheep that know
Their summons, and are gathering round for food – 420 That voice, the same, the very same, that breath
Which was an utterance awful as the wind,
Or any sound the mountains ever heard.

That Shepherd's voice, it may have reached mine ear

Debased and under prophanation, made
An organ for the sounds articulate
Of ribaldry and blasphemy and wrath,
Where drunkenness hath kindled senseless frays.
I came not dreaming of unruffled life,
Untainted manners; born among the hills,
430 Bred also there, I wanted not a scale
To regulate my hopes; pleased with the good,
I shrink not from the evil in disgust,
Or with immoderate pain. I look for man,
The common Creature of the brotherhood,
But little differing from the man elsewhere,
For selfishness and envy and revenge,
Ill neighbourhood – pity that this should be –
Flattery and double-dealing, strife and wrong.

.....

No, We are not alone, we do not stand,

My Emma, here misplaced and desolate,
Loving what no one cares for but ourselves.
We shall not scatter through the plains and rocks
650 Of this fair Vale, and o'er its spacious heights,
Unprofitable kindness, bestowed
On Objects unaccustomed to the gifts
Of feeling, that were cheerless and forlorn
But few weeks past, and would be so again
If we were not; we do not tend a lamp
Whose lustre we alone participate,
Which is dependent upon us alone,
Mortal though bright, a dying, dying flame.
Look where we will, some human heart has been 660 Before us with its offering; not a tree
Sprinkles these little pastures, but the same
Hath furnished matter for a thought; perchance
To some one is as a familiar Friend.
Joy spreads and sorrow spreads; and this whole Vale,
Home of untutored Shepherds as it is,
Swarms with sensation, as with gleams of sunshine,
Shadows or breezes, scents or sounds.

.....

On Man, on Nature, and on human Life,

960 Thinking in solitude, from time to time
I feel sweet passions traversing my Soul
Like Music; unto these, where'er I may,
I would give utterance in numerous verse.
Of truth, of grandeur, beauty, love, and hope –
Hope for this earth and hope beyond the grave;
Of virtue and of intellectual power;
Of blessed consolations in distress;

Of joy in widest commonalty spread;
Of the individual mind that keeps its own 970 Inviolat retirement, and consists
With being limitless, the one great Life;
I sing: fit audience let me find though few.

‘Fit audience find though few’ – thus prayed the Bard,

Holiest of Men. Urania, I shall need
Thy guidance, or a greater Muse, if such Descend to earth or dwell in highest heaven.
For I must tread on shadowy ground, must sink
Deep, and, aloft ascending, breathe in worlds
To which the Heaven of heavens is but a veil.
980 All strength, all terror, single or in bands,
That ever was put forth in personal form –
Jehovah, with his thunder, and the quire
Of shouting angels, and the empyreal thrones –
I pass them unalarmed. The darkest Pit
Of the profoundest Hell, chaos, night,
Nor aught of [] vacancy scooped out
By help of dreams can breed such fear and awe
As fall upon us often when we look
Into our minds, into the mind of Man, 990 My haunt, and the main region of my song.
Beauty, whose living home is the green earth,
Surpassing the most fair ideal Forms
The craft of delicate spirits hath composed
From earth's materials, waits upon my steps,
Pitches her tents before me where I move,
An hourly Neighbour. Paradise, and groves
Elysian, fortunate islands, fields like those of old
In the deep ocean, wherefore should they be
A History, or but a dream, when minds

1000 Once wedded to this outward frame of things
In love, find these the growth of common day?
I, long before the blessed hour arrives,
Would sing in solitude the spousal verse
Of this great consummation, would proclaim –
Speaking of nothing more than what we are –
How exquisitely the individual Mind
(And the progressive powers perhaps no less
Of the whole species) to the external world
Is fitted; and how exquisitely too –
1010 Theme this but little heard of among men –
The external world is fitted to the mind;
And the creation (by no lower name
Can it be called) which they with blended might Accomplish: this is my great argument.
Such [] foregoing, if I oft
Must turn elsewhere, and travel near the tribes
And fellowships of men, and see ill sights
Of passions ravenous from each other's rage,
Must hear humanity in fields and groves
1020 Pipe solitary anguish, or must hang Brooding above the fierce confederate Storm
Of Sorrow, barricadoed evermore
Within the walls of Cities – may these sounds
Have their authentic comment, that even these Hearing, I be not heartless or forlorn!
Come, thou prophetic Spirit, Soul of Man,
Thou human Soul of the wide earth that hast
Thy metropolitan Temple in the hearts
Of mighty Poets: unto me vouchsafe
1030 Thy guidance, teach me to discern and part Inherent things from casual, what is fixed
From fleeting, that my verse may live, and be Even as a light hung up in heaven to cheer
Mankind in times to come! And if with this

I blend more lowly matter – with the thing
Contemplated describe the mind and man
Contemplating, and who and what he was,
The transitory Being that beheld
This vision, when and where and how he lived, 1040 His joys and sorrows and his hopes and fears,
With all his little realities of life –
Be not this labour useless. If such theme
With highest things may [], then Great God,
Thou who art breath and being, way and guide,
And power and understanding, may my life
Express the image of a better time,
More wise desires and simple manners; nurse
My heart in genuine freedom; all pure thoughts
Be with me and uphold me to the end!

FROM POEMS ON THE NAMING OF PLACES

II

To Joanna

Amid the smoke of cities did you pass
Your time of early youth, and there you learned,
From years of quiet industry, to love
The living Beings by your own fire-side,
With such a strong devotion, that your heart
Is slow towards the sympathies of them
Who look upon the hills with tenderness,
And made dear friendships with the streams and groves.
Yet we who are transgressors in this kind,
10 Dwelling retired in our simplicity
Among the woods and fields, we love you well,
Joanna! and I guess, since you have been
So distant from us now for two long years,
That you will gladly listen to discourse
However trivial, if you thence are taught
That they, with whom you once were happy, talk
Familiarly of you and of old times.
While I was seated, now some ten days past,
Beneath those lofty firs, that overtop
20 Their ancient neighbour, the old Steeple tower,
The Vicar from his gloomy house hard by Came forth to greet me, and when he had asked,
'How fares Joanna, that wild-hearted Maid!
And when will she return to us?' he paused,
And after short exchange of village news,
He with grave looks demanded, for what cause,

Reviving obsolete Idolatry,
I like a Runic Priest, in characters
Of formidable size, had chiseled out
30 Some uncouth name upon the native rock,
Above the Rotha, by the forest side.
– Now, by those dear immunities of heart
Engendered betwixt malice and true love,
I was not loth to be so catechized,
And this was my reply. – 'As it befel,
One summer morning we had walked abroad
At break of day, Joanna and myself.
– 'Twas that delightful season, when the broom,
Full flowered, and visible on every steep,
40 Along the copses runs in veins of gold.
Our pathway led us on to Rotha's banks,
And when we came in front of that tall rock
Which looks towards the East, I there stopped short,
And traced the lofty barrier with my eye
From base to summit; such delight I found
To note in shrub and tree, in stone and flower,
That intermixture of delicious hues,
Along so vast a surface, all at once,
In one impression, by connecting force
50 Of their own beauty, imaged in the heart.
– When I had gazed perhaps two minutes' space,
Joanna, looking in my eyes, beheld
That ravishment of mine, and laughed aloud.
The rock, like something starting from a sleep,
Took up the Lady's voice, and laughed again:
That ancient Woman seated on Helm-crag
Was ready with her cavern; Hammar-Scar,
And the tall Steep of Silver-How sent forth
A noise of laughter; southern Loughrigg heard,
60 And Fairfield answered with a mountain tone:
Helvellyn far into the clear blue sky

Carried the Lady's voice, – old Skiddaw blew
His speaking trumpet; – back out of the clouds
Of Glaramara southward came the voice;
And Kirkstone tossed it from his misty head.
Now whether, (said I to our cordial Friend
Who in the hey-day of astonishment
Smiled in my face) this were in simple truth
A work accomplished by the brotherhood
70 Of ancient mountains, or my ear was touched
With dreams and visionary impulses,
Is not for me to tell; but sure I am
That there was a loud uproar in the hills.
And, while we both were listening, to my side
The fair Joanna drew, as if she wished
To shelter from some object of her fear.
– And hence, long afterwards, when eighteen moons
Were wasted, as I chanced to walk alone
Beneath this rock, at sun-rise, on a calm 80 And silent morning, I sate down, and there,
In memory of affections old and true,
I chiseled out in those rude characters
Joanna's name upon the living stone.
And I, and all who dwell by my fire-side
Have called the lovely rock, Joanna's Rock.'

IV
‘A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags’

A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags,
A rude and natural causeway, interposed
Between the water and a winding slope
Of copse and thicket, leaves the eastern shore
Of Grasmere safe in its own privacy.
And there, myself and two beloved Friends,
One calm September morning, ere the mist
Had altogether yielded to the sun,
Sauntered on this retired and difficult way.
10 – Ill suits the road with one in haste, but we Played with our time; and, as we strolled along,
It was our occupation to observe
Such objects as the waves had tossed ashore,
Feather, or leaf, or weed, or withered bough,
Each on the other heaped along the line
Of the dry wreck. And in our vacant mood,
Not seldom did we stop to watch some tuft
Of dandelion seed or thistle's beard,
Which, seeming lifeless half, and half impelled 20 By some internal feeling, skimmed along
Close to the surface of the lake that lay Asleep in a dead calm, ran closely on Along the dead calm lake, now here, now there,
In all its sportive wanderings all the while Making report of an invisible breeze
That was its wings, its chariot, and its horse,

Its very playmate, and its moving soul.
– And often, trifling with a privilege
Alike indulged to all, we paused, one now,
30 And now the other, to point out, perchance
To pluck, some flower or water-weed, too fair
Either to be divided from the place
On which it grew, or to be left alone
To its own beauty. Many such there are,
Fair ferns and flowers, and chiefly that tall plant
So stately, of the Queen Osmunda named,
Plant lovelier in its own retired abode
On Grasmere's beach, than Naiad by the side
Of Grecian brook, or Lady of the Mere 40 Sole-sitting by the shores of old Romance.
– So fared we that sweet morning: from the fields
Meanwhile, a noise was heard, the busy mirth
Of Reapers, Men and Women, Boys and Girls.
Delighted much to listen to those sounds,
And in the fashion which I have described,
Feeding unthinking fancies, we advanced
Along the indented shore; when suddenly,
Through a thin veil of glittering haze, we saw
Before us on a point of jutting land
50 The tall and upright figure of a Man
Attired in peasant's garb, who stood alone
Angling beside the margin of the lake.
That way we turned our steps; nor was it long,
Ere making ready comments on the sight
Which then we saw, with one and the same voice
We all cried out, that he must be indeed
An idle man, who thus could lose a day
Of the mid harvest, when the labourer's hire
Is ample, and some little might be stored
60 Wherewith to cheer him in the winter time.
Thus talking of that Peasant we approached

Close to the spot where with his rod and line
He stood alone; whereat he turned his head
To greet us – and we saw a man worn down
By sickness, gaunt and lean, with sunken cheeks
And wasted limbs, his legs so long and lean
That for my single self I looked at them,
Forgetful of the body they sustained. –
Too weak to labour in the harvest field,
70 The man was using his best skill to gain
A pittance from the dead unfeeling lake
That knew not of his wants. I will not say
What thoughts immediately were ours, nor how
The happy idleness of that sweet morn,
With all its lovely images, was changed
To serious musing and to self-reproach.
Nor did we fail to see within ourselves
What need there is to be reserved in speech,
And temper all our thoughts with charity.
80 – Therefore, unwilling to forget that day,
My Friend, Myself, and She who then received
The same admonishment, have called the place
By a memorial name, uncouth indeed
As e'er by Mariner was giv'n to Bay
Or Foreland on a new-discovered coast,
And, POINT RASH-JUDGEMENT is the Name it bears.

Michael
A Pastoral Poem

If from the public way you turn your steps

Up the tumultuous brook of Green-head Gill,
You will suppose that with an upright path
Your feet must struggle; in such bold ascen
The pastoral Mountains front you, face to face.
But, courage! for beside that boisterous Brook
The mountains have all opened out themselves,
And made a hidden valley of their own.

No habitation there is seen; but such 10 As journey thither find themselves alone
With a few sheep, with rocks and stones, and kites
That overhead are sailing in the sky.

It is in truth an utter solitude,
Nor should I have made mention of this Dell
But for one object which you might pass by,
Might see and notice not. Beside the brook
There is a straggling heap of unhewn stones!
And to that place a story appertains,
Which, though it be ungarnished with events,

20 Is not unfit, I deem, for the fire-side,
Or for the summer shade. It was the first,
The earliest of those tales that spake to me
Of Shepherds, dwellers in the vallies, men
Whom I already loved, not verily

For their own sakes, but for the fields and hills
Where was their occupation and abode.
And hence this Tale, while I was yet a boy
Careless of books, yet having felt the power
Of Nature, by the gentle agency
30 Of natural objects led me on to feel
For passions that were not my own, and think
At random and imperfectly indeed
On man; the heart of man and human life.
Therefore, although it be a history
Homely and rude, I will relate the same
For the delight of a few natural hearts,
And with yet fonder feeling, for the sake
Of youthful Poets, who among these Hills
Will be my second self when I am gone.
40

Upon the Forest-side in Grasmere Vale

There dwelt a Shepherd, Michael was his name,
An old man, stout of heart, and strong of limb.
His bodily frame had been from youth to age
Of an unusual strength: his mind was keen,
Intense and frugal, apt for all affairs,
And in his Shepherd's calling he was prompt
And watchful more than ordinary men.
Hence he had learned the meaning of all winds,
Of blasts of every tone, and often-times
50 When others heeded not, He heard the South
Make subterraneous music, like the noise
Of Bagpipers on distant Highland hills;
The Shepherd, at such warning, of his flock
Bethought him, and he to himself would say
The winds are now devising work for me!
And truly at all times the storm, that drives

The Traveller to a shelter, summoned him
Up to the mountains: he had been alone
Amid the heart of many thousand mists
60 That came to him and left him on the heights.
So lived he till his eightieth year was passed.

And grossly that man errs, who should suppose

That the green Valleys, and the Streams and Rocks
Were things indifferent to the Shepherd's thoughts.
Fields, where with chearful spirits he had breathed
The common air; the hills, which he so oft
Had climbed with vigorous steps; which had impressed
So many incidents upon his mind
Of hardship, skill or courage, joy or fear;
70 Which like a book preserved the memory
Of the dumb animals, whom he had saved,
Had fed or sheltered, linking to such acts,
So grateful in themselves, the certainty
Of honorable gains; these fields, these hills
Which were his living Being, even more
Than his own Blood – what could they less? had laid
Strong hold on his affections, were to him
A pleasurable feeling of blind love,
The pleasure which there is in life itself.

80

He had not passed his days in singleness.

He had a Wife, a comely Matron, old
Though younger than himself full twenty years.
She was a woman of a stirring life
Whose heart was in her house: two wheels she had
Of antique form, this large for spinning wool,
That small for flax, and if one wheel had rest,

It was because the other was at work.
The Pair had but one Inmate in their house,
An only Child, who had been born to them
90 When Michael telling o'er his years began
To deem that he was old, in Shepherd's phrase,
With one foot in the grave. This only son,
With two brave sheep dogs tried in many a storm,
The one of an inestimable worth,
Made all their Household. I may truly say,
That they were as a proverb in the vale
For endless industry. When day was gone,
And from their occupations out of doors
The Son and Father were come home, even then 100 Their labour did not cease, unless when all Turned to their cleanly supper-board, and there
Each with a mess of pottage and skimmed milk,
Sate round their basket piled with oaten cakes,
And their plain home-made cheese. Yet when their meal
Was ended, Luke (for so the Son was named)
And his old Father, both betook themselves
To such convenient work, as might employ
Their hands by the fire-side; perhaps to card
Wool for the House-wife's spindle, or repair 110 Some injury done to sickle, flail, or scythe,
Or other implement of house or field.

Down from the ceiling by the chimney's edge,

Which in our ancient uncouth country style
Did with a huge projection overbrow
Large space beneath, as duly as the light
Of day grew dim, the House-wife hung a lamp;
An aged utensil, which had performed
Service beyond all others of its kind.

Early at evening did it burn and late,
120 Surviving Comrade of uncounted Hours
Which going by from year to year had found
And left the Couple neither gay perhaps
Nor chearful, yet with objects and with hopes
Living a life of eager industry.
And now, when Luke was in his eighteenth year,
There by the light of this old lamp they sate,
Father and Son, while late into the night
The House-wife plied her own peculiar work,
Making the cottage thro' the silent hours
130 Murmur as with the sound of summer flies.
Not with a waste of words, but for the sake
Of pleasure, which I know that I shall give
To many living now, I of this Lamp
Speak thus minutely: for there are no few
Whose memories will bear witness to my tale.
The Light was famous in its neighbourhood,
And was a public Symbol of the life,
The thrifty Pair had lived. For, as it chanced,
Their Cottage on a plot of rising ground
140 Stood single, with large prospect North and South, High into Easedale, up to Dunmal-Raise,
And Westward to the village near the Lake.
And from this constant light so regular
And so far seen, the House itself by all
Who dwelt within the limits of the vale,
Both old and young, was named the Evening Star.

Thus living on through such a length of years,

The Shepherd, if he loved himself, must needs
Have loved his Help-mate; but to Michael's heart 150 This Son of his old age was yet more dear –

Effect which might perhaps have been produced
By that instinctive tenderness, the same
Blind Spirit, which is in the blood of all,
Or that a child, more than all other gifts,
Brings hope with it, and forward-looking thoughts,
And stirrings of inquietude, when they
By tendency of nature needs must fail.
From such, and other causes, to the thoughts
Of the old Man his only Son was now
160 The dearest object that he knew on earth.
Exceeding was the love he bare to him,
His Heart and his Heart's joy! For oftentimes
Old Michael, while he was a babe in arms,
Had done him female service, not alone
For dalliance and delight, as is the use
Of Fathers, but with patient mind enforced
To acts of tenderness; and he had rocked
His cradle with a woman's gentle hand.

And in a later time, ere yet the Boy

170 Had put on Boy's attire, did Michael love,
Albeit of a stern unbending mind,
To have the young one in his sight, when he Had work by his own door, or when he sate
With sheep before him on his Shepherd's stool,
Beneath that large old Oak, which near their door
Stood, and from its enormous breadth of shade
Chosen for the Shearer's covert from the sun,
Thence in our rustic dialect was called
The CLIPPING TREE, a name which yet it bears.
180 There, while they two were sitting in the shade,
With others round them, earnest all and blithe,
Would Michael exercise his heart with looks

Of fond correction and reproof bestowed
Upon the child, if he disturbed the sheep
By catching at their legs, or with his shouts
Scared them, while they lay still beneath the shears.

And when by Heaven's good grace the Boy grew up

A healthy Lad, and carried in his cheek
Two steady roses that were five years old,
190 Then Michael from a winter coppice cut
With his own hand a sapling, which he hooped
With iron, making it throughout in all
Due requisites a perfect Shepherd's Staff,
And gave it to the Boy; wherewith equipped
He as a Watchman oftentimes was placed
At gate or gap, to stem or turn the flock,
And to his office prematurely called
There stood the urchin, as you will divine,
Something between a hindrance and a help,
200 And for this cause not always, I believe,
Receiving from his Father hire of praise.
Though nought was left undone, which staff or voice,
Or looks, or threatening gestures could perform.

But soon as Luke, full ten years old, could stand

Against the mountain blasts, and to the heights,
Not fearing toil, nor length of weary ways,
He with his Father daily went, and they Were as companions, why should I relate
That objects which the Shepherd loved before
210 Were dearer now? that from the Boy there came Feelings and emanations, things which were Light to the sun and music to the wind;
And that the Old Man's heart seemed born again.

Thus in his Father's sight the Boy grew up:

And now when he had reached his eighteenth year,
He was his comfort and his daily hope.

While this good household thus were living on

From day to day, to Michael's ear there came Distressful tidings. Long before the time
220 Of which I speak, the Shepherd had been bound
In surety for his Brother's Son, a man
Of an industrious life, and ample means,
But unforeseen misfortunes suddenly
Had pressed upon him, and old Michael now
Was summoned to discharge the forfeiture,
A grievous penalty, but little less
Than half his substance. This un-looked for claim
At the first hearing, for a moment took
More hope out of his life than he supposed 230 That any old man ever could have lost.
As soon as he had gathered so much strength
That he could look his trouble in the face,
It seemed that his sole refuge was to sell
A portion of his patrimonial fields.
Such was his first resolve; he thought again,
And his heart failed him. 'Isabel,' said he,
Two evenings after he had heard the news,
'I have been toiling more than seventy years,
And in the open sun-shine of God's love
240 Have we all lived, yet if these fields of ours
Should pass into a Stranger's hand, I think
That I could not lie quiet in my grave.
Our lot is a hard lot; the Sun itself
Has scarcely been more diligent than I,

And I have lived to be a fool at last
To my own family. An evil Man
That was, and made an evil choice, if he
Were false to us; and if he were not false,
There are ten thousand to whom loss like this 250 Had been no sorrow. I forgive him – but
'Twere better to be dumb than to talk thus.
When I began, my purpose was to speak
Of remedies and of a chearful hope.
Our Luke shall leave us, Isabel; the land
Shall not go from us, and it shall be free,
He shall possess it, free as is the wind
That passes over it. We have, thou knowest,
Another Kinsman, he will be our friend
In this distress. He is a prosperous man, 260 Thriving in trade, and Luke to him shall go,
And with his Kinsman's help and his own thrift,
He quickly will repair this loss, and then
May come again to us. If here he stay,
What can be done? Where every one is poor
What can be gained?' At this, the old man paused,
And Isabel sate silent, for her mind
Was busy, looking back into past times.
There's Richard Bateman, thought she to herself,
He was a parish-boy – at the church-door
270 They made a gathering for him, shillings, pence,
And halfpennies, wherewith the Neighbours bought
A Basket, which they filled with Pedlar's wares,
And with this Basket on his arm, the Lad
Went up to London, found a Master there,
Who out of many chose the trusty Boy
To go and overlook his merchandise
Beyond the seas, where he grew wond'rous rich,
And left estates and monies to the poor,
And at his birth-place built a Chapel, floored

280 With Marble, which he sent from foreign lands.
These thoughts, and many others of like sort,
Passed quickly thro' the mind of Isabel
And her face brightened. The Old Man was glad,
And thus resumed. 'Well! Isabel, this scheme
These two days has been meat and drink to me.
Far more than we have lost is left us yet.
– We have enough – I wish indeed that I
Were younger, but this hope is a good hope.
– Make ready Luke's best garments, of the best 290 Buy for him more, and let us send him forth
To-morrow, or the next day, or to-night:
If he could go, the Boy should go to-night.'
Here Michael ceased, and to the fields went forth
With a light heart. The House-wife for five days
Was restless morn and night and all day long
Wrought on with her best fingers to prepare
Things needful for the journey of her Son.
But Isabel was glad when Sunday came
To stop her in her work; for, when she lay
300 By Michael's side, she for the two last nights
Heard him, how he was troubled in his sleep:
And when they rose at morning she could see
That all his hopes were gone. That day at noon
She said to Luke, while they two by themselves
Were sitting at the door, 'Thou must not go,
We have no other Child but thee to lose,
None to remember – do not go away,
For if thou leave thy Father he will die.'
The Lad made answer with a jocund voice,
310 And Isabel, when she had told her fears,
Recovered heart. That evening her best fare
Did she bring forth, and all together sate
Like happy people round a Christmas fire.

Next morning Isabel resumed her work,

And all the ensuing week the house appeared
As cheerful as a grove in Spring: at length
The expected letter from their Kinsman came,
With kind assurances that he would do
His utmost for the welfare of the Boy,
320 To which requests were added that forthwith
He might be sent to him. Ten times or more
The letter was read over; Isabel
Went forth to shew it to the neighbours round:
Nor was there at that time on English Land
A prouder heart than Luke's. When Isabel
Had to her house returned, the Old Man said
'He shall depart to-morrow.' To this word
The House-wife answered, talking much of things
Which, if at such short notice he should go,
330 Would surely be forgotten. But at length
She gave consent, and Michael was at ease.

Near the tumultuous brook of Green-head Gill,

In that deep Valley, Michael had designed
To build a Sheep-fold, and, before he heard
The tidings of his melancholy loss,
For this same purpose he had gathered up
A heap of stones, which close to the brook side
Lay thrown together, ready for the work.
With Luke that evening thitherward he walked;
340 And soon as they had reached the place he stopped
And thus the Old Man spake to him. 'My Son,
To-morrow thou wilt leave me; with full heart
I look upon thee, for thou art the same
That wert a promise to me ere thy birth,
And all thy life hast been my daily joy.

I will relate to thee some little part
Of our two histories; 'twill do thee good
When thou art from me, even if I should speak
Of things thou canst not know of. – After thou
350 First cam'st into the world, as it befalls
To new-born infants, thou didst sleep away
Two days, and blessings from thy Father's tongue
Then fell upon thee. Day by day passed on,
And still I loved thee with encreasing love.
Never to living ear came sweeter sounds
Than when I heard thee by our own fire-side
First uttering without words a natural tune,
When thou, a feeding babe, didst in thy joy
Sing at thy Mother's breast. Month followed month, 360 And in the open fields my life was passed
And in the mountains, else I think that thou
Hadst been brought up upon thy father's knees.
– But we were playmates, Luke; among these hills,
As well thou know'st, in us the old and young
Have played together, nor with me didst thou
Lack any pleasure which a boy can know.'
Luke had a manly heart; but at these words
He sobbed aloud; the Old Man grasped his hand,
And said, 'Nay do not take it so – I see 370 That these are things of which I need not speak.
– Even to the utmost I have been to thee
A kind and a good Father: and herein
I but repay a gift which I myself
Received at others' hands, for, though now old
Beyond the common life of man, I still Remember them who loved me in my youth.
Both of them sleep together: here they lived
As all their Forefathers had done, and when
At length their time was come, they were not loth 380 To give their bodies to the family mold.

I wished that thou should'st live the life they lived.
But 'tis a long time to look back, my Son,
And see so little gain from sixty years.
These fields were burthened when they came to me;
'Till I was forty years of age, not more
Than half of my inheritance was mine.
I toiled and toiled; God blessed me in my work,
And 'till these three weeks past the land was free.
– It looks as if it never could endure
390 Another Master. Heaven forgive me, Luke,
If I judge ill for thee, but it seems good
That thou should'st go.' At this the Old Man paused,
Then, pointing to the Stones near which they stood,
Thus, after a short silence, he resumed:
'This was a work for us, and now, my Son,
It is a work for me. But, lay one Stone –
Here, lay it for me, Luke, with thine own hands.
I for the purpose brought thee to this place.
Nay, Boy, be of good hope: – we both may live 400 To see a better day. At eighty-four
I still am strong and stout; – do thou thy part,
I will do mine. – I will begin again
With many tasks that were resigned to thee;
Up to the heights, and in among the storms,
Will I without thee go again, and do
All works which I was wont to do alone,
Before I knew thy face. – Heaven bless thee Boy!
Thy heart these two weeks has been beating fast
With many hopes – it should be so – yes – yes – 410 I knew that thou could'st never have a wish
To leave me, Luke, thou hast been bound to me
Only by links of love, when thou art gone
What will be left to us! – But, I forget
My purposes. Lay now the corner-stone,
As I requested, and hereafter, Luke,

When thou art gone away, should evil men
Be thy companions, let this Sheep-fold be Thy anchor and thy shield; amid all fear
And all temptation, let it be to thee
420 An emblem of the life thy Fathers lived,
Who, being innocent, did for that cause
Bestir them in good deeds. Now, fare thee well –
When thou return'st, thou in this place wilt see
A work which is not here, a covenant
'Twill be between us – but whatever fate
Befall thee, I shall love thee to the last,
And bear thy memory with me to the grave.'

The Shepherd ended here; and Luke stooped down,

And as his Father had requested, laid
430 The first stone of the Sheep-fold; at the sight
The Old Man's grief broke from him, to his heart
He pressed his Son, he kissed him and wept;
And to the House together they returned.
Next morning, as had been resolved, the Boy
Began his journey, and when he had reached
The public Way, he put on a bold face;
And all the Neighbours as he passed their doors
Came forth, with wishes and with farewell prayers,
That followed him 'till he was out of sight.
440 A good report did from their Kinsman come,
Of Luke and his well-doing; and the Boy
Wrote loving letters, full of wond'rous news,
Which, as the House-wife phrased it, were throughout
The prettiest letters that were ever seen.
Both parents read them with rejoicing hearts.
So, many months passed on: and once again
The Shepherd went about his daily work

With confident and cheerful thoughts; and now
Sometimes when he could find a leisure hour
450 He to that valley took his way, and there
Wrought at the Sheep-fold. Meantime Luke began
To slacken in his duty, and at length
He in the dissolute city gave himself
To evil courses: ignominy and shame
Fell on him, so that he was driven at last
To seek a hiding-place beyond the seas.
There is a comfort in the strength of love;
'Twill make a thing endurable which else
Would break the heart: – Old Michael found it so.
460 I have conversed with more than one who well Remember the Old Man, and what he was
Years after he had heard this heavy news.
His bodily frame had been from youth to age
Of an unusual strength. Among the rocks
He went, and still looked up upon the sun,
And listened to the wind; and as before
Performed all kinds of labour for his Sheep,
And for the land his small inheritance.
And to that hollow Dell from time to time 470 Did he repair, to build the Fold of which His flock had need. 'Tis not forgotten yet
The pity which was then in every heart
For the Old Man – and 'tis believed by all
That many and many a day he thither went,
And never lifted up a single stone.
There, by the Sheep-fold, sometimes was he seen
Sitting alone, with that his faithful Dog,
Then old, beside him, lying at his feet.
The length of full seven years from time to time
480 He at the building of this Sheep-fold wrought.
And left the work unfinished when he died.

Three years, or little more, did Isabel,

Survive her Husband: at her death the estate
Was sold, and went into a Stranger's hand.

The Cottage which was named The Evening Star
Is gone, the ploughshare has been through the ground
On which it stood; great changes have been wrought
In all the neighbourhood, yet the Oak is left
That grew beside their Door; and the remains 490 Of the unfinished Sheep-fold may be seen
Beside the boisterous brook of Green-head Gill.

‘I travelled among unknown Men’

I travelled among unknown Men,

In Lands beyond the Sea;

Nor England! did I know till then

What love I bore to thee.

'Tis past, that melancholy dream!

Nor will I quit thy shore

A second time; for still I seem

To love thee more and more.

Among thy mountains did I feel 10

The joy of my desire;

And She I cherished turned her wheel

Beside an English fire.

Thy mornings shewed – thy nights concealed

The bowers where Lucy played;

And thine is, too, the last green field

Which Lucy's eyes surveyed!

To a Sky-Lark

Up with me! up with me into the clouds!

For thy song, Lark, is strong;

Up with me, up with me into the clouds!

Singing, singing,

With all the heav'ns about thee ringing,

Lift me, guide me, till I find

That spot which seems so to thy mind!

I have walked through wildernesses dreary,

And today my heart is weary;

10

Had I now the soul of a Faery,

Up to thee would I fly.

There is madness about thee, and joy divine

In that song of thine;

Up with me, up with me, high and high,
To thy banqueting-place in the sky!

Joyous as Morning,

Thou art laughing and scorning;

Thou hast a nest, for thy love and thy rest:
And, though little troubled with sloth,
20 Drunken Lark! thou would'st be loth
To be such a Traveller as I.

Happy, happy Liver!

With a soul as strong as a mountain River,
Pouring out praise to the Almighty Giver,
Joy and jollity be with us both!
Hearing thee, or else some other,

As merry a Brother,

I on the earth will go plodding on,
By myself, chearfully, till the day is done.

Alice Fell

The Post-boy drove with fierce career,

For threat'ning clouds the moon had drowned;
When suddenly I seemed to hear
A moan, a lamentable sound.

As if the wind blew many ways

I heard the sound, and more and more:
It seemed to follow with the Chaise,
And still I heard it as before.

At length I to the Boy called out,

10 He stopped his horses at the word;
But neither cry, nor voice, nor shout,
Nor aught else like it could be heard

The Boy then smacked his whip, and fast

The horses scampered through the rain;
And soon I heard upon the blast
The voice, and bade him halt again.

Said I, alighting on the ground,

‘What can it be, this piteous moan?’
And there a little Girl I found,
20 Sitting behind the Chaise, alone.

‘My Cloak!’ the word was last and first,

And loud and bitterly she wept,
As if her very heart would burst;
And down from off the Chaise she leapt.

‘What ails you, Child?’ She sobbed, ‘Look here!’

I saw it in the wheel entangled,
A weather beaten Rag as e’er
From any garden scare-crow dangled.

’Twas twisted betwixt nave and spoke;

30 Her help she lent, and with good heed
Together we released the Cloak;
A wretched, wretched rag indeed!

‘And whither are you going, Child,

Tonight along these lonesome ways?’
‘To Durham’ answered she half wild –
‘Then come with me into the chaise.’

She sate like one past all relief;

Sob after sob she forth did send
In wretchedness, as if her grief
40 Could never, never, have an end.

‘My Child, in Durham do you dwell?’

She checked herself in her distress,
And said, ‘My name is Alice Fell;
I'm fatherless and motherless.

And I to Durham, Sir, belong.’

And then, as if the thought would choke
Her very heart, her grief grew strong;
And all was for her tattered Cloak.

The chaise drove on; our journey's end

50 Was nigh; and, sitting by my side,
As if she'd lost her only friend
She wept, nor would be pacified.

Up to the Tavern-door we post;

Of Alice and her grief I told;
And I gave money to the Host,
To buy a new Cloak for the old.

‘And let it be a duffil grey,

As warm a cloak as man can sell!’
Proud Creature was she the next day,

60 The little Orphan, Alice Fell!

Beggars

She had a tall Man's height, or more;

No bonnet screened her from the heat;
A long drab-coloured Cloak she wore,
A Mantle reaching to her feet:
What other dress she had I could not know;

Only she wore a Cap that was as white as snow.

In all my walks, through field or town,

Such Figure had I never seen:
Her face was of Egyptian brown:
10 Fit person was she for a Queen,
To head those ancient Amazonian files:

Or ruling Bandit's Wife, among the Grecian Isles.

Before me begging did she stand,

Pouring out sorrows like a sea;
Grief after grief: – on English Land
Such woes I knew could never be;

And yet a boon I gave her; for the Creature
Was beautiful to see; a Weed of glorious feature!

I left her, and pursued my way;

20 And soon before me did espy
A pair of little Boys at play,
Chasing a crimson butterfly;
The Taller followed with his hat in hand,

Wreathed round with yellow flow'rs, the gayest of the land.

The Other wore a rimless crown,

With leaves of laurel stuck about:
And they both followed up and down,
Each whooping with a merry shout;
Two Brothers seemed they, eight and ten years old;

30
And like that Woman's face as gold is like to gold.

They bolted on me thus, and lo!

Each ready with a plaintive whine;
Said I, 'Not half an hour ago
Your Mother has had alms of mine.'
'That cannot be,' one answered, 'She is dead.'

'Nay but I gave her pence, and she will buy you bread.'

‘She has been dead, Sir, many a day.’

‘Sweet Boys, you're telling me a lie;

It was your Mother, as I say –’

40 And in the twinkling of an eye,

‘Come, come!’ cried one; and, without more ado,

Off to some other play they both together flew.

To a Butterfly

Stay near me – do not take thy flight!

A little longer stay in sight!
Much converse do I find in Thee,
Historian of my Infancy!
Float near me; do not yet depart!
Dead times revive in thee:
Thou bring'st, gay Creature as thou art!
A solemn image to my heart,

My Father's Family!

10 Oh! pleasant, pleasant were the days,
The time, when in our childish plays
My sister Emmeline and I
Together chased the Butterfly!
A very hunter did I rush
Upon the prey: – with leaps and springs
I followed on from brake to bush;
But She, God love her! feared to brush
The dust from off its wings.

To the Cuckoo

O blithe New-comer! I have heard,

I hear thee and rejoice:
O Cuckoo! shall I call thee Bird,
Or but a wandering Voice?

While I am lying on the grass,

I hear thy restless shout:
From hill to hill it seems to pass,
About, and all about!

To me, no Babbler with a tale

10 Of sunshine and of flowers,
Thou tellest, Cuckoo! in the vale
Of visionary hours.

Thrice welcome, Darling of the Spring!

Even yet thou art to me
No Bird; but an invisible Thing,
A voice, a mystery.

The same whom in my School-boy days

I listened to; that Cry
Which made me look a thousand ways;
20 In bush, and tree, and sky.

To seek thee did I often rove

Through woods and on the green;
And thou wert still a hope, a love;
Still longed for, never seen!

And I can listen to thee yet;

Can lie upon the plain
And listen, till I do beget
That golden time again.

O blessed Bird! the earth we pace

30 Again appears to be
An unsubstantial, faery place;
That is fit home for Thee!

‘My heart leaps up when I behold’

My heart leaps up when I behold
A Rainbow in the sky:
So was it when my life began;
So is it now I am a Man;
So be it when I shall grow old,
Or let me die!
The Child is Father of the Man;
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety.

To H. C., Six Years Old

O Thou! whose fancies from afar are brought;

Who of thy words dost make a mock apparel,
And fittest to unutterable thought
The breeze-like motion and the self-born carol;
Thou Faery Voyager! that dost float
In such clear water, that thy Boat
May rather seem
To brood on air than on an earthly stream;
Suspended in a stream as clear as sky,
10 Where earth and heaven do make one imagery;
O blessed Vision! happy Child!
That art so exquisitely wild,
I think of thee with many fears
For what may be thy lot in future years.

I thought of times when Pain might be thy guest,

Lord of thy house and hospitality;
And grief, uneasy Lover! never rest
But when she sate within the touch of thee.
Oh! too industrious folly!
20 Oh! vain and causeless melancholy!

Nature will either end thee quite;

Or, lengthening out thy season of delight,
Preserve for thee, by individual right,
A young Lamb's heart among the full-grown flocks.
What hast Thou to do with sorrow,
Or the injuries of tomorrow?
Thou art a Dew-drop, which the morn brings forth,
Not doomed to jostle with unkindly shocks;
Or to be trailed along the soiling earth;
30 A Gem that glitters while it lives,
And no forewarning gives;
But, at the touch of wrong, without a strife,
Slips in a moment out of life.

‘Among all lovely things my Love had been’

Among all lovely things my Love had been;

Had noted well the stars, all flowers that grew
About her home; but she had never seen
A Glow-worm, never one, and this I knew.

While riding near her home one stormy night

A single Glow-worm did I chance to espy;
I gave a fervent welcome to the sight,
And from my Horse I leapt; great joy had I.

Upon a leaf the Glow-worm did I lay,

10 To bear it with me through the stormy night:
And, as before, it shone without dismay;
Albeit putting forth a fainter light.

When to the Dwelling of my Love I came,

I went into the Orchard quietly;
And left the Glow-worm, blessing it by name,
Laid safely by itself, beneath a Tree.

The whole next day, I hoped, and hoped with fear;

At night the Glow-worm shone beneath the Tree:

I led my Lucy to the spot, 'Look here!'

20 Oh! joy it was for her, and joy for me!

To a Butterfly

I've watched you now a full half hour,

Self-poised upon that yellow flower;
And, little Butterfly! indeed
I know not if you sleep, or feed.
How motionless! not frozen seas
More motionless! and then
What joy awaits you, when the breeze
Hath found you out among the trees,
And calls you forth again!

10

This plot of Orchard-ground is ours;

My trees they are, my Sister's flowers;
Stop here whenever you are weary,
And rest as in a sanctuary!
Come often to us, fear no wrong;
Sit near us on the bough!
We'll talk of sunshine and of song;
And summer days, when we were young,
Sweet childish days, that were as long

As twenty days are now!

Resolution and Independence

There was a roaring in the wind all night;
The rain came heavily and fell in floods;
But now the sun is rising calm and bright;
The birds are singing in the distant woods;
Over his own sweet voice the Stock-dove broods;
The Jay makes answer as the Magpie chatters;
And all the air is filled with pleasant noise of waters.

All things that love the sun are out of doors;

The sky rejoices in the morning's birth;
10 The grass is bright with rain-drops; on the moors
The Hare is running races in her mirth;
And with her feet she from the plashy earth
Raises a mist; which, glittering in the sun,
Runs with her all the way, wherever she doth run.

I was a Traveller then upon the moor;

I saw the Hare that raced about with joy;
I heard the woods, and distant waters, roar;
Or heard them not as happy as a Boy:
The pleasant season did my heart employ:
20 My old remembrances went from me wholly;
And all the ways of men, so vain and melancholy.

But, as it sometimes chanceth, from the might

Of joy in minds that can no farther go,
As high as we have mounted in delight
In our dejection do we sink as low,
To me that morning did it happen so;
And fears, and fancies, thick upon me came;
Dim sadness, and blind thoughts I knew not nor could name.

I heard the Sky-lark singing in the sky;

30 And I bethought me of the playful Hare:
Even such a happy Child of earth am I;
Even as these blissful Creatures do I fare;
Far from the world I walk, and from all care;
But there may come another day to me,
Solitude, pain of heart, distress, and poverty.

My whole life I have lived in pleasant thought,

As if life's business were a summer mood;
As if all needful things would come unsought
To genial faith, still rich in genial good; 40 But how can He expect that others should Build for him, sow for him, and at his call
Love him, who for himself will take no heed at all?

I thought of Chatterton, the marvellous Boy,

The sleepless Soul that perished in its pride;
Of Him who walked in glory and in joy
Behind his plough, upon the mountain-side:
By our own spirits are we deified;

We Poets in our youth begin in gladness;
But thereof comes in the end despondency and madness.
50 Now, whether it were by peculiar grace,
A leading from above, a something given,
Yet it befel, that, in this lonely place,
When up and down my fancy thus was driven,
And I with these untoward thoughts had striven,
I saw a Man before me unawares:
The oldest Man he seemed that ever wore grey hairs.

My course I stopped as soon as I espied

The Old Man in that naked wilderness:
Close by a Pond, upon the further side,
60 He stood alone: a minute's space I guess
I watched him, he continuing motionless:
To the Pool's further margin then I drew;
He being all the while before me full in view.

As a huge Stone is sometimes seen to lie

Couched on the bald top of an eminence;
Wonder to all who do the same espy
By what means it could thither come, and whence;
So that it seems a thing endued with sense:
Like a Sea-beast crawled forth, which on a shelf
70 Of rock or sand reposeth, there to sun itself.

Such seemed this Man, not all alive nor dead,

Nor all asleep; in his extreme old age:
His body was bent double, feet and head
Coming together in their pilgrimage;

As if some dire constraint of pain, or rage
Of sickness felt by him in times long past,
A more than human weight upon his frame had cast.

Himself he propped, his body, limbs, and face,

Upon a long grey Staff of shaven wood:
80 And, still as I drew near with gentle pace,
Beside the little pond or moorish flood
Motionless as a Cloud the Old Man stood;
That heareth not the loud winds when they call;
And moveth altogether, if it move at all.

At length, himself unsettling, he the Pond

Stirred with his Staff, and fixedly did look
Upon the muddy water, which he coned,
As if he had been reading in a book:
And now such freedom as I could I took;
90 And, drawing to his side, to him did say,
'This morning gives us promise of a glorious day.'

A gentle answer did the Old Man make,

In courteous speech which forth he slowly drew:
And him with further words I thus bespake,
'What kind of work is that which you pursue?
This is a lonesome place for one like you.'
He answered me with pleasure and surprize;
And there was, while he spake, a fire about his eyes.

His words came feebly, from a feeble chest,

100 Yet each in solemn order followed each,
With something of a lofty utterance drest;
Choice word, and measured phrase; above the reach
Of ordinary men; a stately speech!
Such as grave Livers do in Scotland use,
Religious men, who give to God and Man their dues.

He told me that he to this pond had come

To gather Leeches, being old and poor:
Employment hazardous and wearisome!
And he had many hardships to endure:
110 From Pond to Pond he roamed, from moor to moor,
Housing, with God's good help, by choice or chance:
And in this way he gained an honest maintenance.

The Old Man still stood talking by my side;

But now his voice to me was like a stream
Scarce heard; nor word from word could I divide;
And the whole Body of the man did seem Like one whom I had met with in a dream;
Or like a Man from some far region sent;
To give me human strength, and strong admonishment.
120 My former thoughts returned: the fear that kills;
The hope that is unwilling to be fed;
Cold, pain, and labour, and all fleshly ills;
And mighty Poets in their misery dead.
And now, not knowing what the Old Man had said,
My question eagerly did I renew,
'How is it that you live, and what is it you do?'

He with a smile did then his words repeat;

And said, that, gathering Leeches, far and wide
He travelled; stirring thus about his feet 130 The waters of the Ponds where they abide.
'Once I could meet with them on every side;
But they have dwindled long by slow decay;
Yet still I persevere, and find them where I may.'

While he was talking thus, the lonely place,

The Old Man's shape, and speech, all troubled me:
In my mind's eye I seemed to see him pace
About the weary moors continually,
Wandering about alone and silently.
While I these thoughts within myself pursued,
140 He, having made a pause, the same discourse renewed.

And soon with this he other matter blended,

Chearfully uttered, with demeanour kind,
But stately in the main; and, when he ended,
I could have laughed myself to scorn, to find
In that decrepit Man so firm a mind.
'God,' said I, 'be my help and stay secure;
I'll think of the Leech-gatherer on the lonely moor.'

‘Within our happy Castle there dwelt one’

Within our happy Castle there dwelt one

Whom without blame I may not overlook:
For never sun on living creature shone
Who more devout enjoyment with us took.
Here on his hours he hung as on a book;
On his own time he here would float away;
As doth a fly upon a summer brook;
But, go tomorrow, or belike, today,
Seek for him, he is fled; and whither none could say.
10

Thus often would he leave our peaceful home,

And find elsewhere his business or delight.
Out of our Valley's limits did he roam:
Full many a time, upon a stormy night,
His voice came to us from the neighbouring height:
Oft did we see him driving full in view
At mid-day, when the sun was shining bright:
What ill was on him, what he had to do,
A mighty wonder bred among our quiet crew.

Ah! piteous sight it was to see this Man.

20 When he came back to us a withered flower,
Or like a sinful creature pale and wan:
Down would he lie, and without strength or power
Look at the common grass from hour to hour:
And oftentimes, how long I fear to say,
Where apple-trees in blossom made a bower,
Retired in that sunshiny shade he lay,
And, like a naked Indian, slept himself away.

Great wonder to our gentle tribe it was

Whenever from our Valley he withdrew;
30 For happier soul no living creature has
Than he had, being here the long day through
Some thought he was a lover and did woo;
Some thought far worse of him, and did him wrong;
But Verse was what he had been wedded to:
And his own mind did, like a tempest strong,
Come to him thus; and drove the weary Man along.

With him there often walked in friendly wise,

Or lay upon the moss, by brook or tree,
A noticeable Man, with large dark eyes,
40 And a pale face, that seemed undoubtedly
As if a blooming face it ought to be:
Heavy his low-hung lip did oft appear,
A face divine of heaven-born ideotcy!
Profound his forehead was, though not severe;
Yet some did think that he had little business here.

Ah! God forefend! his was a lawful right.

Noisy he was, and gamesome as a boy:
His limbs would toss about him with delight,
Like branches when strong winds the trees annoy.
50 He lacked not implement, device, or toy,
To cheat away the hours that silent were:
He would have taught you how you might employ
Yourself; and many did to him repair,
And, certes, not in vain: – he had inventions rare.

Instruments had he, playthings for the ear,

Long blades of grass plucked round him as he lay;
These served to catch the wind as it came near;
Glasses he had with many colours gay;
Others that did all little things display;
60 The beetle with his radiance manifold,
A mailed angel on a battle day.
And leaves and flowers, and herbage green and gold,
And all the glorious sights which fairies do behold.

He would entice that other man to hear

His music, and to view his imagery:
And sooth, these two did love each other dear,
As far as love in such a place could be:
There did they lie from earthly labour free,
Most happy livers as were ever seen!
70 If but a bird, to keep them company,
Or butterfly sate down, they were, I ween,
As pleas'd as if the same had been a Maiden Queen.

‘The world is too much with us’

The world is too much with us; late and soon,

Getting and spending, we lay waste our powers:

Little we see in nature that is ours;

We have given our hearts away, a sordid boon!

This Sea that bares her bosom to the moon;

The Winds that will be howling at all hours

And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers;

For this, for every thing, we are out of tune;

It moves us not – Great God! I'd rather be

10 A Pagan suckled in a creed outworn;

So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,

Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;

Have sight of Proteus coming from the sea;

Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn.

‘With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh’

With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh,

Like stars in heaven, and joyously it showed;
Some lying fast at anchor in the road,
Some veering up and down, one knew not why.
A goodly Vessel did I then espy
Come like a Giant from a haven broad;
And lustily along the Bay she strode,
Her tackling rich, and of apparel high.
This Ship was nought to me, nor I to her,
10 Yet I pursued her with a Lover's look;
This Ship to all the rest did I prefer:
When will she turn, and whither? She will brook
No tarrying; where she comes the winds must stir:
On went She, and due north her journey took.

‘Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued’

Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued

How fondly! whether you delight in screen
Of shady woods to rest yourselves unseen,
Or from your lofty dwellings scarcely viewed
But by the mountain eagle, your bold brood
Pure as the morning, angry, boisterous, keen,
Green as sea water, foaming white and green,
Comes roaring like a joyous multitude.
Nor have I been your follower in vain;
10 For not to speak of life and its first joys
Bound to your goings by a tender chain
Of flowers and delicate dreams that entertain
Loose minds when Men are growing into Boys,
My manly heart has owed to your rough noise
Triumph and thoughts no bondage could restrain.

‘Great Men have been among us’

Great Men have been among us; hands that penned

And tongues that uttered wisdom, better none:
The later Sydney, Marvel, Harrington,
Young Vane, and others who called Milton Friend.
These Moralists could act and comprehend:
They knew how genuine glory was put on;
Taught us how rightfully a nation shone
In splendor: what strength was, that would not bend
But in magnanimous meekness. France, ‘tis strange,
Hath brought forth no such souls as we had then.
Perpetual emptiness! unceasing change!
No single Volume paramount, no code,
No master spirit, no determined road;
But equally a want of Books and Men!

‘It is not to be thought of that the Flood’

It is not to be thought of that the Flood

Of British freedom, which to the open Sea
Of the world's praise from dark antiquity
Hath flowed, ‘with pomp of waters, unwithstood,’ Road by which all might come and go that would,
And bear out freights of worth to foreign lands;
That this most famous Stream in Bogs and Sands
Should perish; and to evil and to good
Be lost for ever. In our Halls is hung
10 Armoury of the invincible Knights of old:
We must be free or die, who speak the tongue
That Shakespeare spake; the faith and morals hold
Which Milton held. In every thing we are sprung
Of Earth's first blood, have titles manifold.

‘When I have borne in memory what has tamed’

When I have borne in memory what has tamed

Great Nations, how ennobling thoughts depart
When Men change Swords for Ledgers, and desert
The Student's bower for gold, some fears unnamed
I had, my Country! am I to be blamed?
But, when I think of Thee, and what Thou art,
Verily, in the bottom of my heart,
Of those unfilial fears I am ashamed.
But dearly must we prize thee; we who find 10 In thee a bulwark of the cause of men;
And I by my affection was beguiled.
What wonder, if a Poet, now and then,
Among the many movements of his mind,
Felt for thee as a Lover or a Child.

‘England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean’

England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean

Thy heart from its emasculating food;
The truth should now be better understood;
Old things have been unsettled; we have seen
Fair seed-time, better harvest might have been
But for thy trespasses; and, at this day,
If for Greece, Egypt, India, Africa,
Aught good were destined, Thou wouldst step between.
England! all nations in this charge agree:
10 But worse, more ignorant in love and hate,
Far, far more abject is thine Enemy:
Therefore the wise pray for thee, though the freight
Of thy offences be a heavy weight:
Oh grief! that Earth's best hopes rest all with Thee!

Composed by the Sea-Side, near Calais August, 1802

Fair Star of Evening, Splendor of the West,

Star of my Country! on the horizon's brink
Thou hangest, stooping, as might seem, to sink
On England's bosom; yet well pleased to rest,
Meanwhile, and be to her a glorious crest
Conspicuous to the Nations. Thou, I think,
Should'st be my Country's emblem; and should'st wink,
Bright Star! with laughter on her banners, drest
In thy fresh beauty. There! that dusky spot
10 Beneath thee, it is England; there it lies.
Blessings be on you both! one hope, one lot,
One life, one glory! I, with many a fear
For my dear Country, many heartfelt sighs,
Among Men who do not love her linger here.

‘It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free’

It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free;

The holy time is quiet as a Nun
Breathless with adoration; the broad sun
Is sinking down in its tranquillity;
The gentleness of heaven is on the Sea:
Listen! the mighty Being is awake
And doth with his eternal motion make
A sound like thunder – everlastingly.
Dear Child! dear Girl! that walkest with me here,
10 If thou appear'st untouched by solemn thought,
Thy nature is not therefore less divine:
Thou liest in Abraham's bosom all the year;
And worshipp'st at the Temple's inner shrine,
God being with thee when we know it not.

To Toussaint L'Ouverture

Toussaint, the most unhappy Man of Men!

Whether the rural Milk-maid by her Cow
Sing in thy hearing, or thou liest now
Alone in some deep dungeon's earless den,
O miserable Chieftain! where and when Wilt thou find patience? Yet die not; do thou
Wear rather in thy bonds a chearful brow:
Though fallen Thyself, never to rise again,
Live, and take comfort. Thou hast left behind 10 Powers that will work for thee; air, earth, and skies;
There's not a breathing of the common wind
That will forget thee; thou hast great allies;
Thy friends are exultations, agonies,
And love, and Man's unconquerable mind.

Composed in the Valley, near Dover, on the Day of Landing

Dear fellow-Traveller! here we are once more.

The Cock that crows, the Smoke that curls, that sound
Of Bells, those Boys that in yon meadow-ground
In white-sleev'd shirts are playing by the score,
And even this little River's gentle roar,
All, all are English. Oft have I look'd round
With joy in Kent's green vales; but never found Myself so satisfied in heart before.
Europe is yet in Bonds; but let that pass,
10 Thought for another moment. Thou art free
My Country! and 'tis joy enough and pride
For one hour's perfect bliss, to tread the grass
Of England once again, and hear and see,
With such a dear Companion at my side.

Composed Upon Westminster Bridge
Sept. 2, 1802

Earth has not any thing to shew more fair:

Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty:
This City now doth like a garment wear
The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theatres, and temples lie
Open unto the fields, and to the sky;
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
Never did sun more beautifully steep
10 In his first splendor valley, rock, or hill;
Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!
The river glideth at his own sweet will:
Dear God! the very houses seem asleep;
And all that mighty heart is lying still!

London
1802

Milton! thou should'st be living at this hour:

England hath need of thee: she is a fen
Of stagnant waters: altar, sword and pen,
Fireside, the heroic wealth of hall and bower,
Have forfeited their ancient English dower
Of inward happiness. We are selfish men;
Oh! raise us up, return to us again;
And give us manners, virtue, freedom, power.
Thy soul was like a Star and dwelt apart:
10 Thou hadst a voice whose sound was like the sea;
Pure as the naked heavens, majestic, free,
So didst thou travel on life's common way,
In chearful godliness; and yet thy heart
The lowliest duties on itself did lay.

‘Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room’

Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room;

And Hermits are contented with their Cells;
And Students with their pensive Citadels:
Maids at the Wheel, the Weaver at his Loom,
Sit blithe and happy; Bees that soar for bloom,
High as the highest Peak of Furness Fells,
Will murmur by the hour in Foxglove bells:
In truth, the prison, unto which we doom
Ourselves, no prison is: and hence to me,
10 In sundry moods, ‘twas pastime to be bound
Within the Sonnet's scanty plot of ground:
Pleased if some Souls (for such there needs must be)
Who have felt the weight of too much liberty,
Should find short solace there, as I have found.

Yarrow Unvisited

(See the various Poems the scene of which is laid upon the Banks of the Yarrow; in particular, the exquisite Ballad of Hamilton, beginning

‘Busk ye, busk ye my bonny, bonny Bride,

Busk ye, busk ye my winsome Marrow!’ –)

From Stirling Castle we had seen

The mazy Forth unravelled;
Had trod the banks of Clyde, and Tay,
And with the Tweed had travelled;
And, when we came to Clovenford,
Then said my ‘winsome Marrow’,
‘Whate’er betide, we’ll turn aside,
And see the Braes of Yarrow.’

‘Let Yarrow Folk, frae Selkirk Town,

10 Who have been buying, selling,
Go back to Yarrow, ‘tis their own,
Each Maiden to her Dwelling!
On Yarrow's Banks let herons feed,
Hares couch, and rabbits burrow!
But we will downwards with the Tweed,

Nor turn aside to Yarrow.
There's Galla Water, Leader Haughs,
Both lying right before us;
And Dryborough, where with chiming Tweed
20 The Lintwhites sing in chorus;
There's pleasant Tiviot Dale, a land
Made blithe with plough and harrow;
Why throw away a needful day
To go in search of Yarrow?

What's Yarrow but a River bare

That glides the dark hills under?
There are a thousand such elsewhere
As worthy of your wonder.'
– Strange words they seem'd of slight and scorn;
30 My True-love sighed for sorrow;
And looked me in the face, to think
I thus could speak of Yarrow!

‘Oh! green,’ said I, ‘are Yarrow's Holms,

And sweet is Yarrow flowing!
Fair hangs the apple frae the rock,*
But we will leave it growing.
O'er hilly path, and open Strath,
We'll wander Scotland thorough;
But, though so near, we will not turn
40 Into the Dale of Yarrow.

Let Beeves and home-bred Kine partake

The sweets of Burn-mill meadow;

The Swan on still St Mary's Lake
Float double, Swan and Shadow!
We will not see them; will not go,
Today, nor yet tomorrow;
Enough if in our hearts we know
There's such a place as Yarrow.

Be Yarrow Stream unseen, unknown!

50 It must, or we shall rue it:
We have a vision of our own;
Ah! why should we undo it?
The treasured dreams of times long past
We'll keep them, winsome Marrow!
For when we're there although 'tis fair
'T will be another Yarrow!

If Care with freezing years should come,

And wandering seem but folly,
Should we be loth to stir from home,
60 And yet be melancholy;
Should life be dull, and spirits low,
'T will soothe us in our sorrow
That earth has something yet to show,
The bonny Holms of Yarrow!'

‘She was a Phantom of delight’

She was a Phantom of delight

When first she gleamed upon my sight;
A lovely Apparition, sent
To be a moment's ornament;
Her eyes as stars of Twilight fair;
Like Twilight's, too, her dusky hair;
But all things else about her drawn
From May-time and the chearful Dawn;
A dancing Shape, an Image gay,
10 To haunt, to startle, and way-lay.

I saw her upon nearer view,

A Spirit, yet a Woman too!
Her household motions light and free,
And steps of virgin liberty;
A countenance in which did meet
Sweet records, promises as sweet;
A Creature not too bright or good
For human nature's daily food;
For transient sorrows, simple wiles,
20 Praise, blame, love, kisses, tears, and smiles.

And now I see with eye serene

The very pulse of the machine;
A Being breathing thoughtful breath;
A Traveller betwixt life and death;
The reason firm, the temperate will,
Endurance, foresight, strength and skill;
A perfect Woman; nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and command;
And yet a Spirit still, and bright
30 With something of an angel light.

Ode to Duty

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God!

O Duty! if that name thou love
Who art a Light to guide, a Rod
To check the erring, and reprove;
Thou who art victory and law
When empty terrors overawe;
From vain temptations dost set free;
From strife and from despair; a glorious ministry.

There are who ask not if thine eye

10 Be on them; who, in love and truth,
Where no misgiving is, rely
Upon the genial sense of youth:
Glad Hearts! without reproach or blot;
Who do thy work, and know it not:
May joy be theirs while life shall last!
And Thou, if they should totter, teach them to stand fast!

Serene will be our days and bright,

And happy will our nature be,
When love is an unerring light,

20 And joy its own security.
And blessed are they who in the main
This faith, even now, do entertain:
Live in the spirit of this creed;
Yet find that other strength, according to their need.

I, loving freedom, and untried;

No sport of every random gust,
Yet being to myself a guide,
Too blindly have reposed my trust:
Resolved that nothing e'er should press
30 Upon my present happiness,
I shoved unwelcome tasks away;
But thee I now would serve more strictly, if I may.

Through no disturbance of my soul,

Or strong compunction in me wrought,
I supplicate for thy controul;
But in the quietness of thought:
Me this unchartered freedom tires;
I feel the weight of chance desires:
My hopes no more must change their name,
40 I long for a repose which ever is the same.

Yet not the less would I throughout

Still act according to the voice
Of my own wish; and feel past doubt
That my submissiveness was choice:
Not seeking in the school of pride
For 'precepts over dignified,'

Denial and restraint I prize
No farther than they breed a second Will more wise.

Stern Lawgiver! yet thou dost wear

50 The Godhead's most benignant grace;
Nor know we any thing so fair
As is the smile upon thy face;
Flowers laugh before thee on their beds;
And Fragrance in thy footing treads;
Thou dost preserve the Stars from wrong;
And the most ancient Heavens through Thee are fresh and strong.

To humbler functions, awful Power!

I call thee: I myself commend
Unto thy guidance from this hour;
60 Oh! let my weakness have an end!
Give unto me, made lowly wise,
The spirit of self-sacrifice;
The confidence of reason give;
And in the light of truth thy Bondman let me live!

Ode
Paulò majora canamus

There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream,

The earth, and every common sight,

To me did seem

Apparelled in celestial light,

The glory and the freshness of a dream.

It is not now as it has been of yore; –

Turn wheresoe'er I may,

By night or day,

The things which I have seen I now can see no more.

10

The Rainbow comes and goes,

And lovely is the Rose,

The Moon doth with delight

Look round her when the heavens are bare;

Waters on a starry night

Are beautiful and fair;

The sunshine is a glorious birth;

But yet I know, where'er I go,

That there hath passed away a glory from the earth.

Now, while the Birds thus sing a joyous song,

20

And while the young Lambs bound

As to the tabor's sound,

To me alone there came a thought of grief:

A timely utterance gave that thought relief,

And I again am strong.

The Cataracts blow their trumpets from the steep,

No more shall grief of mine the season wrong;

I hear the Echoes through the mountains throng,

The Winds come to me from the fields of sleep,

And all the earth is gay,

30

Land and sea

Give themselves up to jollity,

And with the heart of May

Doth every Beast keep holiday,

Thou Child of Joy

Shout round me, let me hear thy shouts, thou happy

Shepherd Boy!

Ye blessed Creatures, I have heard the call

Ye to each other make; I see

The heavens laugh with you in your jubilee;

My heart is at your festival

40

My head hath its coronal,

The fullness of your bliss, I feel – I feel it all.

Oh evil day! if I were sullen

While the Earth herself is adorning,

This sweet May-morning,

And the Children are pulling,

On every side,

In a thousand vallies far and wide,

Fresh flowers; while the sun shines warm,

And the Babe leaps up on his mother's arm: –

50

I hear, I hear, with joy I hear!

– But there's a Tree, of many one,

A single Field which I have looked upon,

Both of them speak of something that is gone:

The Pansy at my feet

Doth the same tale repeat:

Whither is fled the visionary gleam?
Where is it now, the glory and the dream?

Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting:

The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star, 60

Hath had elsewhere its setting,

And cometh from afar:

Not in entire forgetfulness,

And not in utter nakedness,

But trailing clouds of glory do we come

From God, who is our home:

Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
Shades of the prison-house begin to close

Upon the growing Boy,

But He beholds the light, and whence it flows, 70

He sees it in his joy;

The Youth, who daily farther from the East

Must travel, still is Nature's Priest,

And by the vision splendid

Is on his way attended;

At length the Man perceives it die away,
And fade into the light of common day.
Earth fills her lap with pleasures of her own;
Yearnings she hath in her own natural kind,
And, even with something of a Mother's mind,

80

And no unworthy aim,

The homely Nurse doth all she can

To make her Foster-child, her Inmate Man,

Forget the glories he hath known,

And that imperial palace whence he came.

Behold the Child among his new-born blisses,

A four year's Darling of a pigmy size!
See, where 'mid work of his own hand he lies,
Fretted by sallies of his Mother's kisses,
With light upon him from his Father's eyes!
90 See, at his feet, some little plan or chart,
Some fragment from his dream of human life,
Shaped by himself with newly-learned art;

A wedding or a festival,

A mourning or a funeral;

And this hath now his heart,

And unto this he frames his song:

Then will he fit his tongue

To dialogues of business, love, or strife;

But it will not be long

100

Ere this be thrown aside,

And with new joy and pride

The little Actor cons another part,
Filling from time to time his 'humorous stage'
With all the Persons, down to palsied Age,
That Life brings with her in her Equipage;

As if his whole vocation

Were endless imitation.

Thou, whose exterior semblance doth belie

Thy Soul's immensity;

110 Thou best Philosopher, who yet dost keep Thy heritage, thou Eye among the blind,
That, deaf and silent, read'st the eternal deep,
Haunted for ever by the eternal mind, –

Mighty Prophet! Seer blest!

On whom those truths do rest,

Which we are toiling all our lives to find;
Thou, over whom thy Immortality
Broods like the Day, a Master o'er a Slave,
A Presence which is not to be put by;

120

To whom the grave

Is but a lonely bed without the sense or sight

Of day or the warm light,

A place of thought where we in waiting lie;
Thou little Child, yet glorious in the might
Of untamed pleasures, on thy Being's height,
Why with such earnest pains dost thou provoke
The Years to bring the inevitable yoke,
Thus blindly with thy blessedness at strife?
Full soon thy Soul shall have her earthly freight, 130 And custom lie upon thee with a weight,

Heavy as frost, and deep almost as life!

O joy! that in our embers

Is something that doth live,

That nature yet remembers

What was so fugitive!

The thought of our past years in me doth breed
Perpetual benedictions: not indeed
For that which is most worthy to be blest;
Delight and liberty, the simple creed
140 Of Childhood, whether fluttering or at rest,
With new-born hope for ever in his breast: –

Not for these I raise

The song of thanks and praise;

But for those obstinate questionings

Of sense and outward things,

Fallings from us, vanishings;

Blank misgivings of a Creature

Moving about in worlds not realized,

High instincts, before which our mortal Nature
150 Did tremble like a guilty Thing surprized:

But for those first affections,

Those shadowy recollections,

Which, be they what they may,

Are yet the fountain light of all our day,
Are yet a master light of all our seeing;

Uphold us, cherish us, and make

Our noisy years seem moments in the being
Of the eternal Silence: truths that wake,

To perish never;

160 Which neither listlessness, nor mad endeavour,

Nor Man nor Boy,

Nor all that is at enmity with joy,
Can utterly abolish or destroy!

Hence, in a season of calm weather,

Though inland far we be,

Our Souls have sight of that immortal sea

Which brought us hither,

Can in a moment travel thither,

And see the Children sport upon the shore,
170 And hear the mighty waters rolling evermore.

Then, sing ye Birds, sing, sing a joyous song!

And let the young Lambs bound

As to the tabor's sound!

We in thought will join your throng,

Ye that pipe and ye that play,

Ye that through your hearts today

Feel the gladness of the May!

What though the radiance which was once so bright
Be now for ever taken from my sight,
180

Though nothing can bring back the hour

Of splendour in the grass, of glory in the flower;

We will grieve not, rather find

Strength in what remains behind,

In the primal sympathy

Which having been must ever be,

In the soothing thoughts that spring

Out of human suffering,

In the faith that looks through death,

In years that bring the philosophic mind.
190 And oh ye Fountains, Meadows, Hills, and Groves,
Think not of any severing of our loves!
Yet in my heart of hearts I feel your might;
I only have relinquished one delight
To live beneath your more habitual sway.
I love the Brooks which down their channels fret,
Even more than when I tripped lightly as they;
The innocent brightness of a new-born Day

Is lovely yet;

The Clouds that gather round the setting sun
200 Do take a sober colouring from an eye
That hath kept watch o'er man's mortality;
Another race hath been, and other palms are won.
Thanks to the human heart by which we live,
Thanks to its tenderness, its joys, and fears,
To me the meanest flower that blows can give

Thoughts that do often lie too deep for tears.

‘I wandered lonely as a Cloud’

I wandered lonely as a Cloud
That floats on high o'er Vales and Hills,
When all at once I saw a crowd
A host of dancing Daffodils;
Along the Lake, beneath the trees,
Ten thousand dancing in the breeze.

The waves beside them danced, but they

Outdid the sparkling waves in glee: –
A Poet could not but be gay
10 In such a laughing company:
I gazed – and gazed – but little thought
What wealth the shew to me had brought:

For oft when on my couch I lie

In vacant or in pensive mood,
They flash upon that inward eye
Which is the bliss of solitude,
And then my heart with pleasure fills,
And dances with the Daffodils.

Stepping Westward

While my Fellow-traveller and I were walking by the side of Loch Ketterine, one fine evening after sun-set, in our road to a Hut where in the course of our Tour we had been hospitably entertained some weeks before, we met, in one of the loneliest parts of that solitary region, two well-dressed Women, one of whom said to us, by way of greeting, 'What you are stepping westward?'

'What you are stepping westward?' – 'Yea'
– 'Twould be a wildish destiny,
If we, who thus together roam
In a strange Land, and far from home,
Were in this place the guests of Chance:
Yet who would stop, or fear to advance,
Though home or shelter he had none,
With such a Sky to lead him on?

The dewy ground was dark and cold;

10 Behind, all gloomy to behold;
And stepping westward seemed to be
A kind of heavenly destiny;
I liked the greeting, 'twas a sound
Of something without place or bound;
And seemed to give me spiritual right
To travel through that region bright.

The voice was soft, and she who spake

Was walking by her native Lake:
The salutation had to me
20 The very sound of courtesy:
Its power was felt; and while my eye
Was fixed upon the glowing sky,
The echo of the voice enwrought
A human sweetness with the thought
Of travelling through the world that lay
Before me in my endless way.

The Solitary Reaper

Behold her, single in the field,
Yon solitary Highland Lass!
Reaping and singing by herself;
Stop here, or gently pass!
Alone she cuts, and binds the grain,
And sings a melancholy strain;
O listen! for the Vale profound
Is overflowing with the sound.

No Nightingale did ever chaunt

10 So sweetly to reposing bands
Of Travellers in some shady haunt,
Among Arabian Sands:
No sweeter voice was ever heard
In spring-time from the Cuckoo-bird,
Breaking the silence of the seas
Among the farthest Hebrides.

Will no one tell me what she sings?

Perhaps the plaintive numbers flow
For old, unhappy, far-off things, 20 And battles long ago:
Or is it some more humble lay,
Familiar matter of today?

Some natural sorrow, loss, or pain,
That has been, and may be again!

Whate'er the theme, the Maiden sang

As if her song could have no ending;
I saw her singing at her work,
And o'er the sickle bending;
I listened till I had my fill:
30 And, as I mounted up the hill,
The music in my heart I bore,
Long after it was heard no more.

Elegiac Stanzas
Suggested by a Picture of Peele Castle, in a Storm, Painted by Sir George Beaumont

I was thy Neighbour once, thou rugged Pile!
Four summer weeks I dwelt in sight of thee:
I saw thee every day; and all the while
Thy Form was sleeping on a glassy sea.

So pure the sky, so quiet was the air!

So like, so very like, was day to day!
Whene'er I looked, thy Image still was there;
It trembled, but it never passed away.

How perfect was the calm! it seemed no sleep;

10 No mood, which season takes away, or brings:
I could have fancied that the mighty Deep
Was even the gentlest of all gentle Things.

Ah! THEN, if mine had been the Painter's hand,

To express what then I saw; and add the gleam,
The light that never was, on sea or land,
The consecration, and the Poet's dream;

I would have planted thee, thou hoary Pile!

Amid a world how different from this!
Beside a sea that could not cease to smile;
On tranquil land, beneath a sky of bliss: 20

Thou shouldst have seemed a treasure-house, a mine

Of peaceful years; a chronicle of heaven: –
Of all the sunbeams that did ever shine
The very sweetest had to thee been given.

A Picture had it been of lasting ease,

Elysian quiet, without toil or strife;
No motion but the moving tide, a breeze,
Or merely silent Nature's breathing life.

Such, in the fond delusion of my heart,

30 Such Picture would I at that time have made:
And seen the soul of truth in every part;
A faith, a trust, that could not be betrayed.

So once it would have been, – 'tis so no more;

I have submitted to a new controul:
A power is gone, which nothing can restore;
A deep distress hath humanized my Soul.

Not for a moment could I now behold

A smiling sea and be what I have been:
The feeling of my loss will ne'er be old;
40 This, which I know, I speak with mind serene.

Then, Beaumont, Friend! who would have been the Friend,

If he had lived, of Him whom I deplore,
This Work of thine I blame not, but commend;
This sea in anger, and the dismal shore.

Oh 'tis a passionate Work! – yet wise and well;

Well chosen is the spirit that is here;
That Hulk which labours in the deadly swell,
This rueful sky, this pageantry of fear!

And this huge Castle, standing here sublime,

50 I love to see the look with which it braves,
Cased in the unfeeling armour of old time,
The light'ning, the fierce wind, and trampling waves.

Farewell, farewell the Heart that lives alone,

Housed in a dream, at distance from the Kind!
Such happiness, wherever it be known,
Is to be pitied; for 'tis surely blind.

But welcome fortitude, and patient cheer,

And frequent sights of what is to be borne!
Such sights, or worse, as are before me here. –

60 Not without hope we suffer and we mourn.

A Complaint

There is a change – and I am poor;
Your Love hath been, nor long ago,
A Fountain at my fond Heart's door,
Whose only business was to flow;
And flow it did; not taking heed
Of its own bounty, or my need.

What happy moments did I count!

Blessed was I then all bliss above!
Now, for this consecrated Fount
Of murmuring, sparkling, living love,
What have I? Shall I dare to tell?
A comfortless, and hidden WELL.

A Well of love – it may be deep –

I trust it is, and never dry:
What matter? if the Waters sleep
In silence and obscurity.
– Such change, and at the very door
Of my fond Heart, hath made me poor.

Gipsies

Yet are they here? – the same unbroken knot
Of human Beings, in the self-same spot!

Men, Women, Children, yea the frame

Of the whole Spectacle the same!

Only their fire seems bolder, yielding light:
Now deep and red, the colouring of night;

That on their Gipsy-faces falls,

Their bed of straw and blanket-walls.

– Twelve hours, twelve bounteous hours, are gone while I 10 Have been a Traveller under open sky,

Much witnessing of change and chear,

Yet as I left I find them here!

The weary Sun betook himself to rest.

– Then issued Vesper from the fulgent West,

Outshining like a visible God

The glorious path in which he trod.

And now, ascending, after one dark hour,
And one night's diminution of her power,

Behold the mighty Moon! this way

20

She looks as if at them – but they

Regard not her: – oh better wrong and strife
Better vain deeds or evil than such life!

The silent Heavens have goings on;

The stars have tasks – but these have none.

St Paul's

Pressed with conflicting thoughts of love and fear
I parted from thee, Friend! and took my way
Through the great City, pacing with an eye
Downcast, ear sleeping, and feet masterless
That were sufficient guide unto themselves,
And step by step went pensively. Now, mark!
Not how my trouble was entirely hushed,
(That might not be) but how by sudden gift,
Gift of Imagination's holy power,
10 My soul in her uneasiness received
An anchor of stability. It chanced
That while I thus was pacing I raised up
My heavy eyes and instantly beheld,
Saw at a glance in that familiar spot,

A visionary scene – a length of street

Laid open in its morning quietness,
Deep, hollow, unobstructed, vacant, smooth,
And white with winter's purest white, as fair,
As fresh and spotless as he ever sheds
20 On field or mountain. Moving Form was none
Save here and there a shadowy Passenger,
Slow, shadowy, silent, dusky, and beyond
And high above this winding length of street,
This noiseless and unpeopled avenue,
Pure, silent, solemn, beautiful, was seen

The huge majestic Temple of St Paul
In awful sequestration, through a veil,
Through its own sacred veil of falling snow.

‘Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind’

Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind
I wished to share the transport – Oh! with whom
But Thee, long buried in the silent Tomb,
That spot which no vicissitude can find?
Love, faithful love recalled thee to my mind –
But how could I forget thee! – Through what power
Even for the least division of an hour,
Have I been so beguiled as to be blind
To my most grievous loss? – That thought's return 10 Was the worst pang that sorrow ever bore,
Save one, one only, when I stood forlorn,
Knowing my heart's best treasure was no more;
That neither present time, nor years unborn
Could to my sight that heavenly face restore.

Yew-Trees

There is a Yew-tree, pride of Lorton Vale,
Which to this day stands single, in the midst
Of its own darkness, as it stood of yore,
Not loth to furnish weapons for the Bands
Of Umfraville or Percy ere they marched
To Scotland's Heaths; or Those that crossed the Sea
And drew their sounding bows at Azincour,
Perhaps at earlier Crecy, or Poitiers.
Of vast circumference and gloom profound
10 This solitary Tree! – a living thing
Produced too slowly ever to decay;
Of form and aspect too magnificent
To be destroyed. But worthier still of note
Are those fraternal Four of Borrowdale,
Joined in one solemn and capacious grove;
Huge trunks! – and each particular trunk a growth
Of intertwined fibres serpentine
Up-coiling, and inveterately convolved, –
Nor uninformed with Phantasy, and looks 20 That threaten the prophane; – a pillared shade,
Upon whose grassless floor of red-brown hue,
By sheddings from the pining umbrage tinged
Perennially – beneath whose sable roof
Of boughs, as if for festal purpose, decked
With unrejoicing berries, ghostly Shapes
May meet at noontide – Fear and trembling Hope,
Silence and Foresight – Death the Skeleton

And Time the Shadow, – there to celebrate,
As in a natural temple scattered o'er
30 With altars undisturbed of mossy stone,
United worship; or in mute repose
To lie, and listen to the mountain flood
Murmuring from Glaramara's inmost caves.

Composed at Cora Linn
In Sight of Wallace's Tower

‘– How Wallace fought for Scotland, left the name
Of Wallace to be found, like a wild flower,
All over his dear Country; left the deeds
Of Wallace, like a family of ghosts,
To people the steep rocks and river banks
Her natural sanctuaries, with a local soul
Of independence and stern liberty.’

MS.

Lord of the Vale! astounding Flood!

The dullest leaf, in this thick wood,
Quakes – conscious of thy power;
The caves reply with hollow moan;
And vibrates, to its central stone,
Yon time-cemented Tower!

And yet how fair the rural scene!

For thou, O Clyde, hast ever been Beneficent as strong;
10 Pleased in refreshing dew to steep

The little trembling flowers that peep
Thy shelving rocks among.

Hence all who love their country, love

To look on thee – delight to rove
Where they thy voice can hear;
And, to the patriot-warrior's Shade,
Lord of the vale! to Heroes laid
In dust, that voice is dear!

Along thy banks, at dead of night,

20 Sweeps visibly the Wallace Wight;
Or stands, in warlike vest,
Aloft, beneath the moon's pale beam,
A Champion worthy of the Stream,
Yon grey tower's living crest!

But clouds and envious darkness hide

A Form not doubtfully descried: –
Their transient mission o'er,
O say to what blind regions flee
These Shapes of awful phantasy?
30 To what untrodden shore?

Less than divine command they spurn;

But this we from the mountains learn,
And this the valleys show,
That never will they deign to hold

Communion where the heart is cold
To human weal and woe.

The man of abject soul in vain

Shall walk the Marathonian Plain;
Or thrid the shadowy gloom,
40 That still invests the guardian Pass,
Where stood sublime Leonidas,
Devoted to the tomb.

Nor deem that it can aught avail

For such to glide with oar or sail
Beneath the piny wood,
Where Tell once drew, by Uri's lake,
His vengeful shafts – prepared to slake
Their thirst in Tyrants' blood!

Yarrow Visited
September, 1814

And is this – Yarrow? – This the Stream
Of which my fancy cherished,
So faithfully, a waking dream?
An image that hath perished!
O that some Minstrel's harp were near,
To utter notes of gladness,
And chase this silence from the air,
That fills my heart with sadness!

Yet why? – a silvery current flows

10 With uncontrolled meanderings;
Nor have these eyes by greener hills
Been soothed, in all my wanderings.
And, through her depths, Saint Mary's Lake
Is visibly delighted;
For not a feature of those hills
Is in the mirror slighted.

A blue sky bends o'er Yarrow vale,

Save where that pearly whiteness
Is round the rising sun diffused,
20 A tender, hazy brightness;
Mild dawn of promise! that excludes

All profitless dejection;
Though not unwilling here to admit
A pensive recollection.

Where was it that the famous Flower

Of Yarrow Vale lay bleeding?
His bed perchance was yon smooth mound
On which the herd is feeding:
And haply from this crystal pool,
30 Now peaceful as the morning,
The Water-wraith ascended thrice –
And gave his doleful warning.

Delicious is the Lay that sings

The haunts of happy Lovers,
The path that leads them to the grove,
The leafy grove that covers:
And Pity sanctifies the verse
That paints, by strength of sorrow,
The unconquerable strength of love;
40 Bear witness, rueful Yarrow!

But thou, that didst appear so fair

To fond imagination,
Dost rival in the light of day
Her delicate creation:
Meek loveliness is round thee spread,
A softness still and holy;
The grace of forest charms decayed,
And pastoral melancholy.

That Region left, the Vale unfolds

50 Rich groves of lofty stature,
With Yarrow winding through the pomp
Of cultivated nature;
And, rising from those lofty groves,
Behold a Ruin hoary!
The shattered front of Newark's Towers,
Renowned in Border story.

Fair scenes for childhood's opening bloom,

For sportive youth to stray in;
For manhood to enjoy his strength;
60 And age to wear away in!
Yon Cottage seems a bower of bliss;
It promises protection
To studious ease, and generous cares,
And every chaste affection!

How sweet, on this autumnal day,

The wild wood's fruits to gather,
And on my True-love's forehead plant
A crest of blooming heather!
And what if I enwreathed my own!
70 'Twere no offence to reason;
The sober Hills thus deck their brows
To meet the wintry season.

I see – but not by sight alone,

Loved Yarrow, have I won thee;
A ray of Fancy still survives –
Her sunshine plays upon thee!
Thy ever-youthful waters keep
A course of lively pleasure;
And gladsome notes my lips can breathe,
80 Accordant to the measure.

The vapours linger round the Heights,

They melt – and soon must vanish;
One hour is theirs, nor more is mine –
Sad thought, which I would banish,
But that I know, where'er I go,
Thy genuine image, Yarrow,
Will dwell with me – to heighten joy,
And cheer my mind in sorrow.

To B. R. Haydon, Esq.

High is our calling, Friend! – Creative Art
(Whether the instrument of words she use,
Or pencil pregnant with etherial hues,)
Demands the service of a mind and heart,
Though sensitive, yet, in their weakest part,
Heroically fashioned – to infuse
Faith in the whispers of the lonely Muse,
While the whole world seems adverse to desert:
And, oh! when Nature sinks, as oft she may,
10 Through long-lived pressure of obscure distress,
Still to be strenuous for the bright reward,
And in the soul admit of no decay, –
Brook no continuance of weak-mindedness: –
Great is the glory, for the strife is hard!

Sequel to the Foregoing [Beggars]
Composed Many Years After

Where are they now, those wanton Boys?
For whose free range the daedal earth
Was filled with animated toys,
And implements of frolic mirth;
With tools for ready wit to guide;
And ornaments of seemlier pride,
More fresh, more bright, than Princes wear;
For what one moment flung aside,
Another could repair;
10 What good or evil have they seen
Since I their pastime witnessed here,
Their daring wiles, their sportive cheer?
I ask – but all is dark between!
Spirits of beauty and of grace!
Associates in that eager chase;
Ye, by a course to nature true,
The sterner judgment can subdue;
And waken a relenting smile
When she encounters fraud or guile;
20 And sometimes ye can charm away
The inward mischief, or allay,
Ye, who within the blameless mind
Your favourite seat of empire find!

They met me in a genial hour,

When universal nature breathed
As with the breath of one sweet flower, –
A time to overrule the power
Of discontent, and check the birth
Of thoughts with better thoughts at strife,
30 The most familiar bane of life
Since parting Innocence bequeathed
Mortality to Earth!
Soft clouds, the whitest of the year,
Sailed through the sky – the brooks ran clear;
The lambs from rock to rock were bounding;
With songs the budded groves resounding;
And to my heart is still endeared
The faith with which it then was cheered;
The faith which saw that gladsome pair
40 Walk through the fire with unsinged hair.
Or, if such thoughts must needs deceive,
Kind Spirits! may we not believe
That they, so happy and so fair,
Through your sweet influence, and the care
Of pitying Heaven, at least were free
From touch of deadly injury?
Destined, whate'er their earthly doom,
For mercy and immortal bloom!

Ode
Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty

I

Had this effulgence disappeared
With flying haste, I might have sent
Among the speechless clouds a look
Of blank astonishment;
But 'tis endued with power to stay,
And sanctify one closing day,
That frail Mortality may see,
What is? – ah no, but what can be!
Time was when field and watery cove
10 With modulated echoes rang,
While choirs of fervent Angels sang
Their vespers in the grove;
Or, ranged like stars along some sovereign height,
Warbled, for heaven above and earth below,
Strains suitable to both. – Such holy rite,
Methinks, if audibly repeated now
From hill or valley, could not move
Sublimar transport, purer love,
Than doth this silent spectacle – the gleam – 20 The shadow – and the peace supreme!

II

No sound is uttered, – but a deep
And solemn harmony pervades
The hollow vale from steep to steep,
And penetrates the glades.
Far-distant images draw nigh,
Called forth by wond'rous potency
Of beamy radiance, that imbues
Whate'er it strikes, with gem-like hues!
In vision exquisitely clear,
30 Herds range along the mountain side;
And glistening antlers are descried;
And gilded flocks appear.
Thine is the tranquil hour, purpureal Eve!
But long as god-like wish, or hope divine,
Informs my spirit, ne'er can I believe
That this magnificence is wholly thine!
– From worlds not quickened by the sun
A portion of the gift is won;
An intermingling of Heaven's pomp is spread 40 On ground which British shepherds tread!

III

And, if there be whom broken ties
Afflict, or injuries assail,
Yon hazy ridges to their eyes,
Present a glorious scale,
Climbing suffused with sunny air,
To stop – no record hath told where!
And tempting fancy to ascend,
And with immortal spirits blend!
– Wings at my shoulder seem to play;
50 But, rooted here, I stand and gaze
On those bright steps that heaven-ward raise
Their practicable way.
Come forth, ye drooping old men, look abroad
And see to what fair countries ye are bound!
And if some Traveller, weary of his road,
Hath slept since noon-tide on the grassy ground,
Ye Genii! to his covert speed;
And wake him with such gentle heed
As may attune his soul to meet the dower
60 Bestowed on this transcendent hour!

IV

Such hues from their celestial Urn
Were wont to stream before my eye,
Where'er it wandered in the morn
Of blissful infancy.
This glimpse of glory, why renewed?
Nay, rather speak with gratitude;
For, if a vestige of those gleams
Survived, 'twas only in my dreams.
Dread Power! whom peace and calmness serve
70 No less than Nature's threatening voice,
If aught unworthy be my choice,
From THEE if I would swerve,
O, let thy grace remind me of the light,
Full early lost and fruitlessly deplored;
Which, at this moment, on my waking sight
Appears to shine, by miracle restored!
My soul, though yet confined to earth,
Rejoices in a second birth;
– 'Tis past, the visionary splendour fades,
80 And Night approaches with her shades.

NOTE

The multiplication of mountain-ridges, described, at the commencement of the third stanza of this Ode, as a kind of Jacob's Ladder, leading to Heaven, is produced either by watery vapours, or sunny haze, – in the present instance by the latter cause. See the account of the Lakes at the end of this volume. The reader, who is acquainted with the Author's Ode, intitled, 'Intimations of Immortality, &c.' will recognize the allusion to it that pervades the last stanza of the foregoing Poem.

The River Duddon

Conclusion

I thought of Thee, my partner and my guide,

As being past away. – Vain sympathies!

For, backward, Duddon! as I cast my eyes,

I see what was, and is, and will abide;

Still glides the Stream, and shall for ever glide;

The Form remains, the Function never dies;

While we, the brave, the mighty, and the wise,

We Men, who in our morn of youth defied

The elements, must vanish; – be it so!

10 Enough, if something from our hands have power

To live, and act, and serve the future hour;

And if, as tow'rd the silent tomb we go,

Thro' love, thro' hope, and faith's transcendent dower,

We feel that we are greater than we know.

‘The unremitting voice of nightly streams’

The unremitting voice of nightly streams
That wastes so oft, we think, its tuneful powers,
If neither soothing to the worm that gleams
Through dewy grass, nor small birds hushed in bowers,
Nor unto silent leaves and drowsy flowers, –
That voice of unpretending harmony (For who what is shall measure by what seems To be, or not to be,
Or tax high Heaven with prodigality?)
10 Wants not a healing influence that can creep
Into the human breast, and mix with sleep
To regulate the motion of our dreams
For kindly issues – as through every clime
Was felt near murmuring brooks in earliest time;
As at this day, the rudest swains who dwell
Where torrents roar, or hear the tinkling knell
Of water-breaks, with grateful heart could tell.

Airey-Force Valley

——Not a breath of air

Ruffles the bosom of this leafy glen.
From the brook's margin, wide around, the trees
Are stedfast as the rocks; the brook itself,
Old as the hills that feed it from afar,
Doth rather deepen than disturb the calm
Where all things else are still and motionless.
And yet, even now, a little breeze, perchance
Escaped from boisterous winds that rage without, 10 Has entered, by the sturdy oaks unfelt,
But to its gentle touch how sensitive
Is the light ash! that, pendent from the brow
Of yon dim cave, in seeming silence makes
A soft eye-music of slow-waving boughs,
Powerful almost as vocal harmony
To stay the wanderer's steps and soothe his thoughts.

Extempore Effusion upon the Death of James Hogg

When first, descending from the moorlands,
I saw the Stream of Yarrow glide
Along a bare and open valley,
The Ettrick Shepherd was my guide.

When last along its banks I wandered,

Through groves that had begun to shed
Their golden leaves upon the pathways,
My steps the border minstrel led.

The mighty Minstrel breathes no longer,

10 'Mid mouldering ruins low he lies;
And death upon the braes of Yarrow,
Has closed the Shepherd-poet's eyes:

Nor has the rolling year twice measured,

From sign to sign, its stedfast course,
Since every mortal power of Coleridge
Was frozen at its marvellous source;

The rapt One, of the godlike forehead,

The heaven-eyed creature sleeps in earth:
And Lamb, the frolic and the gentle,
20 Has vanished from his lonely hearth.

Like clouds that rake the mountain-summits,

Or waves that own no curbing hand,
How fast has brother followed brother,
From sunshine to the sunless land!

Yet I, whose lids from infant slumbers

Were earlier raised, remain to hear
A timid voice, that asks in whispers,
'Who next will drop and disappear?'

Our haughty life is crowned with darkness,

30 Like London with its own black wreath,
On which with thee, O Crabbe! forth-looking,
I gazed from Hampstead's breezy heath.

As if but yesterday departed,

Thou too art gone before; but why,
O'er ripe fruit, seasonably gathered,
Should frail survivors heave a sigh?

Mourn rather for that holy Spirit,

Sweet as the spring, as ocean deep;
For Her who, ere her summer faded,

40 Has sunk into a breathless sleep.

No more of old romantic sorrows,

For slaughtered Youth or love-lorn Maid!

With sharper grief is Yarrow smitten,

And Ettrick mourns with her their Poet dead.

‘Glad sight wherever new with old’

Glad sight wherever new with old
Is joined through some dear homeborn tie;
The life of all that we behold
Depends upon that mystery.
Vain is the glory of the sky,
The beauty vain of field and grove
Unless, while with admiring eye
We gaze, we also learn to love.

At Furness Abbey

Well have you Railway Labourers to THIS ground
Withdrawn for noontide rest. They sit, they walk
Among the Ruins, but no idle talk
Is heard; to grave demeanour all are bound;
And from one voice a Hymn with tuneful sound
Hallows once more the long-deserted Quire
And thrills the old sepulchral earth, around.
Others look up, and with fixed eyes admire
That wide-spanned arch, wondering how it was raised, 10 To keep, so high in air, its strength and grace:
All seem to feel the spirit of the place,
And by the general reverence God is praised:
Profane Despoilers, stand ye not reprov'd,
While thus these simple-hearted men are moved!

‘I know an aged Man constrained to dwell’

I know an aged Man constrained to dwell
In a large house of public charity,
Where he abides, as in a Prisoner's cell,
With numbers near, alas! no company.

When he could creep about, at will, though poor

And forced to live on alms, this old Man fed
A Redbreast, one that to his cottage door
Came not, but in a lane partook his bread.

There, at the root of one particular tree,

10 An easy seat this worn-out Labourer found
While Robin pecked the crumbs upon his knee
Laid one by one, or scattered on the ground.

Dear intercourse was theirs, day after day;

What signs of mutual gladness when they met!
Think of their common peace, their simple play,
The parting moment and its fond regret.

Months passed in love that failed not to fulfil,

In spite of season's change, its own demand,
By fluttering pinions here and busy bill;
20 There by caresses from a tremulous hand.

Thus in the chosen spot a tie so strong

Was formed between the solitary pair,
That when his fate had housed him mid a throng
The Captive shunned all converse proffered there.

Wife, children, kindred, they were dead and gone;

But, if no evil hap his wishes crossed,
One living Stay was left, and on that one
Some recompense for all that he had lost.

O that the good old Man had power to prove,

30 By message sent through air or visible token,
That still he loves the Bird, and still must love,
That friendship lasts though fellowship is broken!

FROM THE PRELUDE

Book One
Introduction – Childhood and School-Time

Oh there is blessing in this gentle breeze
That blows from the green fields and from the clouds
And from the sky: it beats against my cheek,
And seems half-conscious of the joy it gives.
O welcome Messenger! O welcome Friend!
A captive greets thee, coming from a house
Of bondage, from yon City's walls set free,
A prison where he hath been long immured.
Now I am free, enfranchised and at large,
10 May fix my habitation where I will.
What dwelling shall receive me? In what Vale
Shall be my harbour? Underneath what grove
Shall I take up my home, and what sweet stream
Shall with its murmurs lull me to my rest?
The earth is all before me: with a heart
Joyous, nor scared at its own liberty,
I look about, and should the guide I chuse
Be nothing better than a wandering cloud,
I cannot miss my way. I breathe again;
20 Trances of thought and mountings of the mind
Come fast upon me: it is shaken off,
As by miraculous gift 'tis shaken off,
That burthen of my own unnatural self,
The heavy weight of many a weary day
Not mine, and such as were not made for me.
Long months of peace (if such bold word accord

With any promises of human life),
Long months of ease and undisturbed delight
Are mine in prospect; whither shall I turn 30 By road or pathway or through open field,
Or shall a twig or any floating thing
Upon the river, point me out my course?

Enough that I am free; for months to come

May dedicate myself to chosen tasks;
May quit the tiresome sea and dwell on shore,
If not a Settler on the soil, at least
To drink wild water, and to pluck green herbs,
And gather fruits fresh from their native bough.
Nay more, if I may trust myself, this hour
40 Hath brought a gift that consecrates my joy;
For I, methought, while the sweet breath of Heaven
Was blowing on my body, felt within
A corresponding mild creative breeze,
A vital breeze which travelled gently on O'er things which it had made, and is become
A tempest, a redundant energy
Vexing its own creation. 'Tis a power
That does not come unrecognized, a storm,
Which, breaking up a long-continued frost
50 Brings with it vernal promises, the hope
Of active days, of dignity and thought,
Of prowess in an honorable field,
Pure passions, virtue, knowledge, and delight,

The holy life of music and of verse.

Thus far, O Friend! did I, not used to make

A present joy the matter of my Song,
Pour out, that day, my soul in measured strains,
Even in the very words which I have here
Recorded: to the open fields I told 60 A prophecy: poetic numbers came Spontaneously, and clothed in priestly robe
My spirit, thus singled out, as it might seem,
For holy services: great hopes were mine;
My own voice cheered me, and, far more, the mind's
Internal echo of the imperfect sound;
To both I listened, drawing from them both

A chearful confidence in things to come.

Whereat, being not unwilling now to give

A respite to this passion, I paced on 70 Gently, with careless steps, and came, erelong,
To a green shady place where down I sate
Beneath a tree, slackening my thoughts by choice,
And settling into gentler happiness.
'Twas Autumn, and a calm and placid day,
With warmth as much as needed from a sun
Two hours declined towards the west, a day
With silver clouds, and sunshine on the grass,
And, in the sheltered grove where I was couched
A perfect stillness. On the ground I lay 80 Passing through many thoughts, yet mainly such As to myself pertained. I made a choice
Of one sweet Vale whither my steps should turn,
And saw, methought, the very house and fields
Present before my eyes: nor did I fail
To add, meanwhile, assurance of some work
Of glory, there forthwith to be begun,

Perhaps, too, there performed. Thus long I lay
Cheered by the genial pillow of the earth
Beneath my head, soothed by a sense of touch
90 From the warm ground, that balanced me, else lost
Entirely, seeing nought, nought hearing, save
When here and there, about the grove of Oaks
Where was my bed, an acorn from the trees

Fell audibly, and with a startling sound.

Thus occupied in mind, I lingered here

Contented, nor rose up until the sun
Had almost touched the horizon; bidding then
A farewell to the City left behind,
Even with the chance equipment of that hour
100 I journeyed towards the Vale that I had chosen.
It was a splendid evening, and my soul
Did once again make trial of the strength
Restored to her afresh; nor did she want
Eolian visitations; but the harp
Was soon defrauded, and the banded host
Of harmony dispersed in straggling sounds
And, lastly, utter silence. 'Be it so,
It is an injury,' said I, 'to this day
To think of any thing but present joy.'
110 So like a Peasant I pursued my road
Beneath the evening sun, nor had one wish
Again to bend the sabbath of that time
To a servile yoke. What need of many words?
A pleasant loitering journey, through two days

Continued, brought me to my hermitage.

I spare to speak, my Friend, of what ensued –

The admiration and the love, the life
In common things; the endless store of things
Rare, or at least so seeming, every day
120 Found all about me in one neighbourhood,
The self-congratulation, the complete
Composure, and the happiness entire.
But speedily a longing in me rose
To brace myself to some determined aim,
Reading or thinking, either to lay up
New stores, or rescue from decay the old
By timely interference. I had hopes
Still higher, that with a frame of outward life,
I might endue, might fix in a visible home
130 Some portion of those phantoms of conceit
That had been floating loose about so long,
And to such Beings temperately deal forth
The many feelings that oppressed my heart.
But I have been discouraged; gleams of light
Flash often from the East, then disappear
And mock me with a sky that ripens not
Into a steady morning: if my mind,
Remembering the sweet promise of the past,
Would gladly grapple with some noble theme,
140 Vain is her wish; where'er she turns she finds
Impediments from day to day renewed.

And now it would content me to yield up
Those lofty hopes awhile for present gifts

Of humbler industry. But, O dear Friend!
The Poet, gentle creature as he is,
Hath, like the Lover, his unruly times,
His fits when he is neither sick nor well,
Though no distress be near him but his own
Unmanageable thoughts. The mind itself,
150 The meditative mind, best pleased, perhaps,
While she, as duteous as the Mother Dove,
Sits brooding, lives not always to that end,
But hath less quiet instincts, goadings on
That drive her as in trouble through the groves.
With me is now such passion, which I blame
No otherwise than as it lasts too long.

.....

– Was it for this

That one, the fairest of all Rivers, loved
To blend his murmurs with my Nurse's song,
And from his alder shades and rocky falls,
And from his fords and shallows, sent a voice
That flowed along my dreams? For this, didst Thou,
O Derwent, travelling over the green Plains
Near my 'sweet Birthplace', didst thou, beauteous Stream,
Make ceaseless music through the night and day
280 Which with its steady cadence, tempering
Our human waywardness, composed my thoughts
To more than infant softness, giving me,
Among the fretful dwellings of mankind,
A knowledge, a dim earnest, of the calm
Which Nature breathes among the hills and groves.
When, having left his Mountains, to the Towers
Of Cockermouth that beauteous River came,
Behind my Father's House he passed, close by,
Along the margin of our Terrace Walk.

290 He was a Playmate whom we dearly loved.
Oh! many a time have I, a five years' Child,
A naked Boy in one delightful Rill
A little Mill-race severed from his stream,
Made one long bathing of a summer's day,
Basked in the sun, and plunged, and basked again
Alternate all a summer's day, or coursed
Over the sandy fields, leaping through groves
Of yellow grunsel, or when crag and hill,
The woods, and distant Skiddaw's lofty height,
300 Were bronzed with a deep radiance, stood alone
Beneath the sky, as if I had been born
On Indian Plains, and from my Mother's hut
Had run abroad in wantonness, to sport,

A naked Savage, in the thunder shower.

Fair seed-time had my soul, and I grew up

Fostered alike by beauty and by fear;
Much favored in my birthplace, and no less
In that beloved Vale to which, erelong,
I was transplanted. Well I call to mind 310 ('Twas at an early age, ere I had seen Nine summers) when upon the mountain slope
The frost and breath of frosty wind had snapped
The last autumnal crocus, 'twas my joy
To wander half the night among the Cliffs
And the smooth Hollows, where the woodcocks ran Along the open turf. In thought and wish
That time, my shoulder all with springes hung,
I was a fell destroyer. On the heights
Scudding away from snare to snare, I plied 320 My anxious visitation, hurrying on,

Still hurrying, hurrying onward; moon and stars
Were shining o'er my head; I was alone,
And seemed to be a trouble to the peace
That was among them. Sometimes it befel
In these night-wanderings, that a strong desire
O'erpowered my better reason, and the bird
Which was the captive of another's toils
Became my prey; and, when the deed was done
I heard among the solitary hills
330 Low breathings coming after me, and sounds
Of undistinguishable motion, steps

Almost as silent as the turf they trod.

Nor less in springtime when on southern banks

The shining sun had from his knot of leaves
Decoyed the primrose flower, and when the Vales
And woods were warm, was I a plunderer then
In the high places, on the lonesome peaks
Where'er, among the mountains and the winds,
The Mother Bird had built her lodge. Though mean 340 My object, and inglorious, yet the end
Was not ignoble. Oh! when I have hung
Above the raven's nest, by knots of grass
And half-inch fissures in the slippery rock
But ill sustained, and almost, as it seemed,
Suspended by the blast which blew amain,
Shouldering the naked crag; Oh! at that time,
While on the perilous ridge I hung alone,
With what strange utterance did the loud dry wind
Blow through my ears! the sky seemed not a sky 350
Of earth, and with what motion moved the clouds!

The mind of Man is framed even like the breath

And harmony of music. There is a dark
Invisible workmanship that reconciles
Discordant elements, and makes them move
In one society. Ah me! that all
The terrors all the earl miseries
Regrets, vexations, lassitudes, that all
The thoughts and feelings which have been infused
Into my mind, should ever have made up
360 The calm existence that is mine when I Am worthy of myself! Praise to the end!
Thanks likewise for the means! But I believe
That Nature, oftentimes, when she would frame
A favored Being, from his earliest dawn
Of infancy doth open out the clouds,
As at the touch of lightning, seeking him
With gentlest visitation; not the less,
Though haply aiming at the self-same end,
Does it delight her sometimes to employ
370 Severer interventions, ministry

More palpable, and so she dealt with me.

One evening (surely I was led by her)

I went alone into a Shepherd's Boat,
A Skiff that to a Willow tree was tied Within a rocky Cave, its usual home.
'Twas by the shores of Patterdale, a Vale
Wherein I was a Stranger, thither come
A School-boy Traveller, at the Holidays.

Forth rambled from the Village Inn alone,
380 No sooner had I sight of this small Skiff,
Discovered thus by unexpected chance,
Than I unloosed her tether and embarked.
The moon was up, the Lake was shining clear
Among the hoary mountains; from the Shore
I pushed, and struck the oars and struck again
In cadence, and my little Boat moved on Even like a Man who walks with stately step
Though bent on speed. It was an act of stealth
And troubled pleasure; not without the voice 390 Of mountain-echoes did my Boat move on,
Leaving behind her still on either side
Small circles glittering idly in the moon,
Until they melted all into one track
Of sparkling light. A rocky Steep uprose
Above the Cavern of the Willow tree
And now, as suited one who proudly rowed
With his best skill, I fixed a steady view
Upon the top of that same craggy ridge,
The bound of the horizon, for behind
400 Was nothing but the stars and the grey sky.
She was an elfin Pinnace; lustily
I dipped my oars into the silent Lake,
And, as I rose upon the stroke, my Boat
Went heaving through the water, like a Swan;
When from behind that craggy Steep, till then
The bound of the horizon, a huge Cliff,
As if with voluntary power instinct,
Upreared its head. I struck, and struck again,
And, growing still in stature, the huge Cliff 410 Rose up between me and the stars, and still,
With measured motion, like a living thing,
Strode after me. With trembling hands I turned,
And through the silent water stole my way

Back to the Cavern of the Willow tree.
There, in her mooring-place, I left my Bark,
And, through the meadows homeward went, with grave
And serious thoughts; and after I had seen
That spectacle, for many days, my brain
Worked with a dim and undetermined sense
420 Of unknown modes of being; in my thoughts
There was a darkness, call it solitude,
Or blank desertion, no familiar shapes
Of hourly objects, images of trees,
Of sea or sky, no colours of green fields;
But huge and mighty Forms that do not live
Like living men moved slowly through my mind

By day and were the trouble of my dreams.

Wisdom and Spirit of the universe!

Thou Soul that art the Eternity of Thought!
430 That giv'st to forms and images a breath
And everlasting motion! not in vain,
By day or star-light thus from my first dawn
Of Childhood didst Thou interwine for me
The passions that build up our human Soul,
Not with the mean and vulgar works of Man,
But with high objects, with enduring things,
With life and nature, purifying thus
The elements of feeling and of thought,
And sanctifying, by such discipline,
440 Both pain and fear, until we recognize

A grandeur in the beatings of the heart.

Nor was this fellowship vouchsafed to me

With stinted kindness. In November days,
When vapours rolling down the valleys made
A lonely scene more lonesome; among woods
At noon, and 'mid the calm of summer nights,
When, by the margin of the trembling Lake,
Beneath the gloomy hills I homeward went
In solitude, such intercourse was mine;
450 'Twas mine among the fields both day and night,

And by the waters all the summer long.

And in the frosty season, when the sun

Was set, and visible for many a mile
The cottage windows through the twilight blazed,
I heeded not the summons: – happy time
It was, indeed, for all of us; to me
It was a time of rapture: clear and loud
The village clock tolled six; I wheeled about,
Proud and exulting, like an untired horse,
460 That cares not for its home. – All shod with steel,
We hissed along the polished ice in games
Confederate, imitative of the chace
And woodland pleasures, the resounding horn,
The Pack loud bellowing, and the hunted hare.
So through the darkness and the cold we flew,
And not a voice was idle; with the din,
Meanwhile, the precipices rang aloud;
The leafless trees, and every icy crag
Tinkled like iron; while the distant hills
470 Into the tumult sent an alien sound

Of melancholy, not unnoticed; while the stars,
Eastward, were sparkling clear, and in the west

The orange sky of evening died away.

Not seldom from the uproar I retired

Into a silent bay, or sportively
Glanced sideways, leaving the tumultuous throng,
To cut across the image of a star
That gleamed upon the ice. And oftentimes
When we had given our bodies to the wind, 480 And all the shadowy banks, on either side,
Came sweeping through the darkness, spinning still
The rapid line of motion; then at once
Have I, reclining back upon my heels,
Stopped short, yet still the solitary Cliffs
Wheeled by me, even as if the earth had rolled
With visible motion her diurnal round.
Behind me did they stretch in solemn train
Feebler and feebler, and I stood and watched

Till all was tranquil as a dreamless sleep.

490

Ye Presences of Nature, in the sky

Or on the earth! Ye Visions of the hills!
And Souls of lonely places! can I think
A vulgar hope was yours when Ye employed
Such ministry, when Ye through many a year
Haunting me thus among my boyish sports,
On caves and trees, upon the woods and hills,

Impressed upon all forms the characters
Of danger or desire, and thus did make
The surface of the universal earth
500 With triumph, and delight, and hope, and fear,

Work like a sea?

Not uselessly employed,

I might pursue this theme through every change
Of exercise and play, to which the year
Did summon us in its delightful round.
We were a noisy crew, the sun in heaven
Beheld not vales more beautiful than ours,
Nor saw a race in happiness and joy
More worthy of the fields where they were sown.
I would record with no reluctant voice
510 The woods of autumn and their hazel bowers
With milk-white clusters hung; the rod and line,
True symbol of the foolishness of hope,
Which with its strong enchantment led us on
By rocks and pools, shut out from every star
All the green summer, to forlorn cascades
Among the windings of the mountain brooks.
– Unfading recollections! at this hour
The heart is almost mine with which I felt
From some hill-top, on sunny afternoons
520 The Kite high up among the fleecy clouds
Pull at its rein, like an impatient Courser,
Or, from the meadows sent on gusty days,
Beheld her breast the wind, then suddenly

Dashed headlong; and rejected by the storm.

Ye lowly Cottages in which we dwelt,

A ministration of your own was yours,
A sanctity, a safeguard, and a love!
Can I forget you, being as ye were
So beautiful among the pleasant fields
530 In which ye stood? Or can I here forget
The plain and seemly countenance with which Ye dealt out your plain comforts? Yet had ye
Delights and exultations of your own.
Eager and never weary we pursued
Our home amusements by the warm peat-fire
At evening, when with pencil and with slate,
In square divisions parcelled out, and all
With crosses and with cyphers scribbled o'er,
We schemed and puzzled, head opposed to head
540 In strife too humble to be named in Verse.
Or round the naked table, snow-white deal,
Cherry or maple, sate in close array,
And to the combat, Lu or Whist, led on
A thick-ribbed Army; not as in the world
Neglected and ungratefully thrown by Even for the very service they had wrought,
But husbanded through many a long campaign.
Uncouth assemblage was it, where no few
Had changed their functions, some, plebeian cards, 550 Which Fate beyond the promise of their birth
Had glorified, and called to represent
The persons of departed Potentates.
Oh! with what echoes on the Board they fell!
Ironie Diamonds, Clubs, Hearts, Diamonds, Spades,
A congregation piteously akin.
Cheap matter did they give to boyish wit,

Those sooty knaves, precipitated down
With scoffs and taunts, like Vulcan out of Heaven;
The paramount Ace, a moon in her eclipse;
560 Queens, gleaming through their splendour's last decay;
And Monarchs, surly at the wrongs sustained
By royal visages. Meanwhile, abroad
The heavy rain was falling, or the frost
Raged bitterly, with keen and silent tooth,
And, interrupting oft the impassioned game,
From Esthwaite's neighbouring Lake the splitting ice,
While it sank down towards the water, sent,
Among the meadows and the hills, its long
And dismal yellings, like the noise of wolves 570
When they are howling round the Bothnic Main.

Nor, sedulous as I have been to trace

How Nature by extrinsic passion first
Peopled my mind with beauteous forms or grand
And made me love them, may I well forget
How other pleasures have been mine, and joys
Of subtler origin; how I have felt,
Not seldom, even in that tempestuous time,
Those hallowed and pure motions of the sense
Which seem, in their simplicity, to own
580 An intellectual charm, that calm delight
Which, if I err not, surely must belong
To those first-born affinities that fit
Our new existence to existing things,
And, in our dawn of being, constitute
The bond of union betwixt life and joy.
Yes, I remember, when the changeful earth,
And twice five seasons on my mind had stamped

The faces of the moving year, even then,
A Child, I held unconscious intercourse
590 With the eternal Beauty, drinking in
A pure organic pleasure from the lines
Of curling mist, or from the level plain
Of waters coloured by the steady clouds.
The Sands of Westmoreland, the Creeks and Bays
Of Cumbria's rocky limits, they can tell
How when the Sea threw off his evening shade
And to the Shepherd's huts beneath the crags
Did send sweet notice of the rising moon,
How I have stood, to fancies such as these,
600 Engrafted in the tenderness of thought,
A stranger, linking with the spectacle
No conscious memory of a kindred sight,
And bringing with me no peculiar sense
Of quietness or peace, yet I have stood,
Even while mine eye has moved o'er three long leagues
Of shining water, gathering, as it seemed,
Through every hair-breadth of that field of light,

New pleasure, like a bee among the flowers.

Thus, often in those fits of vulgar joy

610 Which, through all seasons, on a child's pursuits
Are prompt attendants, 'mid that giddy bliss
Which, like a tempest, works along the blood
And is forgotten; even then I felt
Gleams like the flashing of a shield. The earth
And common face of Nature spake to me
Rememberable things; sometimes, 'tis true,
By chance collisions and quaint accidents
Like those ill-sorted unions, work supposed

Of evil-minded fairies, yet not vain,
620 Nor profitless, if haply they impressed
Collateral objects and appearances,
Albeit lifeless then, and doomed to sleep
Until maturer seasons called them forth
To impregnate and to elevate the mind.
– And if the vulgar joy by its own weight
Wearied itself out of the memory,
The scenes which were a witness of that joy
Remained, in their substantial lineaments
Depicted on the brain, and to the eye
630 Were visible, a daily sight. And thus
By the impressive discipline of fear,
By pleasure and repeated happiness,
So frequently repeated, and by force
Of obscure feelings representative
Of joys that were forgotten, these same scenes,
So beauteous and majestic in themselves,
Though yet the day was distant, did at length
Become habitually dear, and all
Their hues and forms were by invisible links
640 Allied to the affections.

I began

My story early, feeling, as I fear,
The weakness of a human love, for days
Disowned by memory, ere the birth of spring
Planting my snowdrops among winter snows.
Nor will it seem to thee, my Friend! so prompt
In sympathy, that I have lengthened out,
With fond and feeble tongue, a tedious tale.
Meanwhile, my hope has been that I might fetch

Invigorating thoughts from former years,
650 Might fix the wavering balance of my mind,
And haply meet reproaches, too, whose power
May spur me on, in manhood now mature,
To honorable toil. Yet should these hopes
Be vain, and thus should neither I be taught
To understand myself, nor thou to know
With better knowledge how the heart was framed
Of him thou lovest, need I dread from thee
Harsh judgments, if I am so loth to quit
Those recollected hours that have the charm
660 Of visionary things, and lovely forms
And sweet sensations, that throw back our life
And almost make our Infancy itself
A visible scene, on which the sun is shining.

.....

Book Two

School-Time (continued)

Thus far, O Friend! have we, though leaving much

Unvisited, endeavoured to retrace
My life through its first years, and measured back
The way I travelled when I first began
To love the woods and fields. The passion yet
Was in its birth, sustained, as might befall,
By nourishment that came unsought; for still,
From week to week, from month to month, we lived
A round of tumult. Duly were our games
10 Prolonged in summer till the day-light failed;
No chair remained before the doors, the bench
And threshold steps were empty; fast asleep
The Labourer, and the Old Man who had sate,
A later lingerer, yet the revelry
Continued, and the loud uproar: at last,
When all the ground was dark, and the huge clouds
Were edged with twinkling stars, to bed we went,
With weary joints, and with a beating mind.
Ah! is there one who ever has been young,
20 And needs a monitory voice to tame
The pride of virtue, and of intellect?
And is there one, the wisest and the best
Of all mankind, who does not sometimes wish
For things which cannot be, who would not give,

If so he might, to duty and to truth
The eagerness of infantine desire?
A tranquillizing spirit presses now
On my corporeal frame: so wide appears
The vacancy between me and those days,
30 Which yet have such self-presence in my mind
That, sometimes, when I think of them, I seem
Two consciousnesses, conscious of myself
And of some other Being. A grey Stone
Of native rock, left midway in the Square
Of our small market Village, was the home
And centre of these joys, and when returned
After long absence, thither I repaired,
I found that it was split, and gone to build
A smart Assembly-room that perked and flared
40 With wash and rough-cast, elbowing the ground
Which had been ours. But let the fiddle scream,
And be ye happy! yet, my Friends! I know
That more than one of you will think with me
Of those soft starry nights, and that old Dame
From whom the stone was named, who there had sate
And watched her Table with its huxter's wares,

Assiduous thro' the length of sixty years.

We ran a boisterous race; the year span round

With giddy motion. But the time approached
50 That brought with it a regular desire
For calmer pleasures, when the beauteous forms
Of Nature were collaterally attached
To every scheme of holiday delight,
And every boyish sport, less grateful else,
And languidly pursued.

When summer came

It was the pastime of our afternoons
To beat along the plain of Windermere
With rival oars, and the selected bourne
Was now an Island musical with birds
60 That sang for ever; now a Sister Isle
Beneath the oaks' umbrageous covert, sown
With lillies of the valley like a field;
And now a third small Island where remained
An old stone Table, and a mouldered Cave,
A Hermit's history. In such a race,
So ended, disappointment could be none,
Uneasiness, or pain, or jealousy:
We rested in the shade, all pleased alike,
Conquered and Conqueror. Thus the pride of strength, 70 And the vain-glory of superior skill
Were interfused with objects which subdued
And tempered them, and gradually produced
A quiet independence of the heart.
And to my Friend, who knows me, I may add,
Unapprehensive of reproof, that hence
Ensued a diffidence and modesty,
And I was taught to feel, perhaps too much,

The self-sufficing power of solitude.

No delicate viands sapped our bodily strength;

80 More than we wished we knew the blessing then
Of vigorous hunger, for our daily meals
Were frugal, Sabine fare! and then, exclude
A little weekly stipend, and we lived

Through three divisions of the quartered year
In pennyless poverty. But now, to School
Returned, from the half-yearly holidays,
We came with purses more profusely filled,
Allowance which abundantly sufficed
To gratify the palate with repasts
90 More costly than the Dame of whom I spake,
That ancient Woman, and her board supplied.
Hence inroads into distant Vales, and long
Excursions far away among the hills,
Hence rustic dinners on the cool green ground,
Or in the woods, or near a river side,
Or by some shady fountain, while soft airs
Among the leaves were stirring, and the sun
Unfelt, shone sweetly round us in our joy.

Nor is my aim neglected, if I tell

100 How twice in the long length of those half-years
We from our funds, perhaps, with bolder hand
Drew largely, anxious for one day, at least,
To feel the motion of the galloping Steed;
And with the good old Inn-keeper, in truth,
On such occasion sometimes we employed
Sly subterfuge; for the intended bound
Of the day's journey was too distant far
For any cautious man, a Structure famed
Beyond its neighbourhood, the antique Walls
110 Of that large Abbey which within the Vale
Of Nightshade, to St Mary's honour built,
Stands yet, a mouldering Pile, with fractured Arch,
Belfry, and Images, and living Trees,
A holy Scene! Along the smooth green turf

Our Horses grazed: to more than inland peace
Left by the sea wind passing overhead
(Though wind of roughest temper) trees and towers
May in that Valley oftentimes be seen,
Both silent and both motionless alike;
120 Such is the shelter that is there, and such

The safeguard for repose and quietness.

Our steeds remounted, and the summons given,

With whip and spur we by the Chauntry flew
In uncouth race, and left the cross-legged Knight,
And the stone-Abbot, and that single Wren
Which one day sang so sweetly in the Nave
Of the old Church, that, though from recent showers
The earth was comfortless, and, touched by faint
Internal breezes, sobbings of the place,
130 And respirations, from the roofless walls
The shuddering ivy dripped large drops, yet still,
So sweetly 'mid the gloom the invisible Bird
Sang to itself, that there I could have made
My dwelling-place, and lived for ever there
To hear such music. Through the Walls we flew
And down the valley, and a circuit made
In wantonness of heart, through rough and smooth
We scampered homeward. Oh! ye Rocks and Streams,
And that still Spirit of the evening air!
140 Even in this joyous time I sometimes felt
Your presence, when with slackened step we breathed
Along the sides of the steep hills, or when,
Lighted by gleams of moonlight from the sea,

We beat with thundering hoofs the level sand.

Upon the Eastern Shore of Windermere,

Above the crescent of a pleasant Bay,
There stood an Inn, no homely-featured Shed,
Brother of the surrounding Cottages,
But 'twas a splendid place, the door beset 150 With Chaises, Grooms, and Liveries, and within Decanters, Glasses, and the blood-red Wine.
In ancient times, or ere the Hall was built
On the large Island, had this Dwelling been More worthy of a Poet's love, a Hut,
Proud of its one bright fire, and sycamore shade.
But though the rhymes were gone which once inscribed
The threshold, and large golden characters
On the blue-frosted Signboard had usurped
The place of the old Lion, in contempt
160 And mockery of the rustic painter's hand,
Yet to this hour the spot to me is dear
With all its foolish pomp. The garden lay
Upon a slope surmounted by the plain
Of a small Bowling-green; beneath us stood
A grove, with gleams of water through the trees
And over the tree-tops; nor did we want
Refreshment, strawberries and mellow cream.
And there, through half an afternoon, we played
On the smooth platform, and the shouts we sent 170 Made all the mountains ring. But ere the fall
Of night, when in our pinnacle we returned
Over the dusky Lake, and to the beach
Of some small Island steered our course with one,
The Minstrel of our troop, and left him there,
And rowed off gently, while he blew his flute
Alone upon the rock, Oh! then the calm

And dead still water lay upon my mind
Even with a weight of pleasure, and the sky
Never before so beautiful, sank down 180
Into my heart, and held me like a dream.

Thus daily were my sympathies enlarged,

And thus the common range of visible things
Grew dear to me: already I began
To love the sun, a Boy I loved the sun,
Not as I since have loved him, as a pledge
And surety of our earthly life, a light
Which while we view we feel we are alive,
But, for this cause, that I had seen him lay
His beauty on the morning hills, had seen
190 The western mountain touch his setting orb
In many a thoughtless hour, when, from excess
Of happiness, my blood appeared to flow
With its own pleasure, and I breathed with joy.
And from like feelings, humble though intense,
To patriotic and domestic love
Analogous, the moon to me was dear;
For I would dream away my purposes,
Standing to look upon her while she hung
Midway between the hills, as if she knew
200 No other region but belonged to thee,
Yea, appertained by a peculiar right

To thee and thy grey huts, my darling Vale!

Those incidental charms which first attached

My heart to rural objects, day by day
Grew weaker, and I hasten on to tell
How Nature, intervenient till this time,
And secondary, now at length was sought
For her own sake. But who shall parcel out
His intellect, by geometric rules, 210 Split, like a province, into round and square?
Who knows the individual hour in which
His habits were first sown, even as a seed,
Who that shall point, as with a wand, and say,
'This portion of the river of my mind
Came from yon fountain?' Thou, my Friend! art one
More deeply read in thy own thoughts; to thee
Science appears but, what in truth she is,
Not as our glory and our absolute boast,
But as a succedaneum, and a prop
220 To our infirmity. Thou art no slave
Of that false secondary power, by which
In weakness we create distinctions, then
Deem that our puny boundaries are things
Which we perceive, and not which we have made.
To thee, unblinded by these outward shows,
The unity of all has been revealed,
And thou wilt doubt with me, less aptly skilled Than many are to class the cabinet
Of their sensations, and, in voluble phrase,
230 Run through the history and birth of each
As of a single independent thing.
Hard task to analyse a soul, in which,
Not only general habits and desires,
But each most obvious and particular thought,
Not in a mystical and idle sense,
But in the words of reason deeply weighed,
Hath no beginning.

Blessed the infant Babe,

(For with my best conjectures I would trace
The progress of our being) blest the Babe, 240 Nursed in his Mother's arms, the Babe who sleeps
Upon his Mother's breast, who, when his soul
Claims manifest kindred with an earthly soul,
Doth gather passion from his Mother's eye!
Such feelings pass into his torpid life
Like an awakening breeze, and hence his mind,
Even in the first trial of its powers,
Is prompt and watchful, eager to combine
In one appearance, all the elements
And parts of the same object, else detached 250 And loth to coalesce. Thus, day by day,
Subjected to the discipline of love,
His organs and recipient faculties
Are quickened, are more vigorous, his mind spreads,
Tenacious of the forms which it receives.
In one beloved presence, nay and more,
In that most apprehensive habitude
And those sensations which have been derived
From this beloved Presence, there exists
A virtue which irradiates and exalts
260 All objects through all intercourse of sense.
No outcast he, bewildered and depressed;
Along his infant veins are interfused
The gravitation and the filial bond
Of nature, that connect him with the world.
Emphatically such a Being lives,
An inmate of this active universe;
From nature largely he receives; nor so
Is satisfied, but largely gives again,
For feeling has to him imparted strength,

270 And powerful in all sentiments of grief,
Of exultation, fear, and joy, his mind,
Even as an agent of the one great mind,
Creates, creator and receiver both,
Working but in alliance with the works
Which it beholds. – Such, verily, is the first
Poetic spirit of our human life;
By uniform controul of after years
In most abated or suppressed, in some,
Through every change of growth or of decay,
280 Pre-eminent till death.

From early days,

Beginning not long after that first time
In which, a Babe, by intercourse of touch
I held mute dialogues with my Mother's heart,
I have endeavoured to display the means
Whereby the infant sensibility,
Great birthright of our Being, was in me
Augmented and sustained. Yet is a path
More difficult before me, and I fear
That in its broken windings we shall need 290 The chamois' sinews, and the eagle's wing:
For now a trouble came into my mind
From unknown causes. I was left alone,
Seeking the visible world, nor knowing why.
The props of my affections were removed,
And yet the building stood, as if sustained
By its own spirit! All that I beheld
Was dear to me, and from this cause it came,
That now to Nature's finer influxes
My mind lay open, to that more exact
300 And intimate communion which our hearts
Maintain with the minuter properties

Of objects which already are beloved,
And of those only. Many are the joys
Of youth; but oh! what happiness to live
When every hour brings palpable access
Of knowledge, when all knowledge is delight,
And sorrow is not there. The seasons came,
And every season to my notice brought
A store of transitory qualities

310 Which, but for this most watchful power of love
Had been neglected, left a register
Of permanent relations, else unknown.
Hence life, and change, and beauty, solitude
More active, even, than 'best society',
Society made sweet as solitude
By silent inobtrusive sympathies,
And gentle agitations of the mind
From manifold distinctions, difference
Perceived in things, where to the common eye,
320 No difference is; and hence, from the same source
Sublimar joy. For I would walk alone,
In storm and tempest, or in starlight nights
Beneath the quiet Heavens; and, at that time,
Have felt whate'er there is of power in sound
To breathe an elevated mood, by form
Or image unprofaned; and I would stand,
Beneath some rock, listening to sounds that are
The ghostly language of the ancient earth,
Or make their dim abode in distant winds.
330 Thence did I drink the visionary power.
I deem not profitless those fleeting moods
Of shadowy exultation: not for this,
That they are kindred to our purer mind
And intellectual life; but that the soul,
Remembering how she felt, but what she felt Remembering not, retains an obscure sense

Of possible sublimity, to which,
With growing faculties she doth aspire,
With faculties still growing, feeling still 340 That whatsoever point they gain, they still Have something to pursue.

And not alone

In grandeur and in tumult, but no less
In tranquil scenes, that universal power
And fitness in the latent qualities
And essences of things, by which the mind
Is moved by feelings of delight, to me
Came strengthened with a superadded soul,
A virtue not its own. My morning walks
Were early; oft, before the hours of School 350 I travelled round our little Lake, five miles
Of pleasant wandering, happy time! more dear
For this, that one was by my side, a Friend
Then passionately loved; with heart how full
Will he peruse these lines, this page, perhaps
A blank to other men! for many years
Have since flowed in between us; and our minds
Both silent to each other, at this time
We live as if those hours had never been.
Nor seldom did I lift our cottage latch
360 Far earlier, and before the vernal thrush
Was audible, among the hills I sate
Alone, upon some jutting eminence
At the first hour of morning, when the Vale
Lay quiet in an utter solitude.
How shall I trace the history, where seek
The origin of what I then have felt?
Oft in those moments such a holy calm
Did overspread my soul, that I forgot

That I had bodily eyes, and what I saw 370 Appeared like something in myself, a dream
A prospect in my mind.

'Twere long to tell

What spring and autumn, what the winter snows,
And what the summer shade, what day and night,
The evening and the morning, what my dreams
And what my waking thoughts supplied, to nurse
That spirit of religious love in which I walked with Nature. But let this at least
Be not forgotten, that I still retained
My first creative sensibility,
380 That by the regular action of the world
My soul was unsubdued. A plastic power
Abode with me, a forming hand, at times
Rebellious, acting in a devious mood,
A local spirit of its own, at war
With general tendency, but for the most Subservient strictly to the external things
With which it communed. An auxiliar light
Came from my mind which on the setting sun
Bestowed new splendor; the melodious birds, 390 The gentle breezes, fountains that ran on,
Murmuring so sweetly in themselves, obeyed
A like dominion; and the midnight storm
Grew darker in the presence of my eye.
Hence my obeisance, my devotion hence,
And hence my transport.

Nor should this, perchance,

Pass unrecorded, that I still had loved
The exercise and produce of a toil

Than analytic industry to me
More pleasing, and whose character I deem 400 Is more poetic, as resembling more
Creative agency. I mean to speak
Of that interminable building reared
By observation of affinities
In objects where no brotherhood exists
To common minds. My seventeenth year was come,
And, whether from this habit rooted now
So deeply in my mind, or from excess
Of the great social principle of life,
Coercing all things into sympathy,
410 To unorganic natures I transferred
My own enjoyments, or, the power of truth
Coming in revelation, I conversed
With things that really are, I at this time
Saw blessings spread around me like a sea.
Thus did my days pass on, and now at length
From Nature and her overflowing soul
I had received so much that all my thoughts
Were steeped in feeling. I was only then
Contented when with bliss ineffable
420 I felt the sentiment of Being spread
O'er all that moves, and all that seemeth still,
O'er all, that, lost beyond the reach of thought
And human knowledge, to the human eye
Invisible, yet liveth to the heart,
O'er all that leaps, and runs, and shouts, and sings,
Or beats the gladsome air, o'er all that glides
Beneath the wave, yea, in the wave itself
And mighty depth of waters. Wonder not
If such my transports were, for in all things 430 I saw one life, and felt that it was joy.
One song they sang, and it was audible,
Most audible then when the fleshly ear,

O'ercome by grosser prelude of that strain,
Forgot its functions, and slept undisturbed.

If this be error, and another faith

Find easier access to the pious mind,
Yet were I grossly destitute of all
Those human sentiments which make this earth
So dear, if I should fail, with grateful voice
440 To speak of you, Ye Mountains and Ye Lakes,
And sounding Cataracts! Ye Mists and Winds
That dwell among the hills where I was born.
If, in my youth, I have been pure in heart,
If, mingling with the world, I am content
With my own modest pleasures, and have lived,
With God and Nature communing, removed
From little enmities and low desires,
The gift is yours; if in these times of fear,
This melancholy waste of hopes o'erthrown,
450 If, 'mid indifference and apathy
And wicked exultation, when good men,
On every side fall off we know not how,
To selfishness, disguised in gentle names
Of peace, and quiet, and domestic love,
Yet mingled, not unwillingly, with sneers
On visionary minds; if in this time
Of dereliction and dismay, I yet
Despair not of our nature; but retain
A more than Roman confidence, a faith
460 That fails not, in all sorrow my support,
The blessing of my life, the gift is yours,
Ye mountains! thine, O Nature! Thou hast fed
My lofty speculations; and in thee

For this uneasy heart of ours I find
A never-failing principle of joy,
And purest passion.

Thou, my Friend! wert reared

In the great City, 'mid far other scenes;
But we, by different roads at length have gained
The self-same bourne. And for this cause to Thee
470 I speak, unapprehensive of contempt,
The insinuated scoff of coward tongues,
And all that silent language which so oft
In conversation betwixt man and man
Blots from the human countenance all trace
Of beauty and of love. For Thou hast sought
The truth in solitude, and Thou art one,
The most intense of Nature's worshippers,
In many things my Brother, chiefly here
In this my deep devotion.

Fare Thee well!

480 Health, and the quiet of a healthful mind
Attend thee! seeking oft the haunts of men,
And yet more often living with Thyself,
And for Thyself, so haply shall thy days
Be many, and a blessing to mankind.

Book Three

Residence at Cambridge

It was a dreary morning when the Chaise

Rolled over the flat Plains of Huntingdon
And, through the open windows, first I saw
The long-backed Chapel of King's College rear
His pinnacles above the dusky groves.

Soon afterwards, we espied upon the road,
A student clothed in Gown and tasselled Cap;
He passed; nor was I master of my eyes
Till he was left a hundred yards behind.

10 The Place, as we approached, seemed more and more
To have an eddy's force, and sucked us in
More eagerly at every step we took.

Onward we drove beneath the Castle, down
By Magdalene Bridge we went and crossed the Cam,

And at the Hoop we landed, famous Inn.

My spirit was up, my thoughts were full of hope;

Some Friends I had, acquaintances who there
Seemed Friends, poor simple Schoolboys, now hung round
With honour and importance; in a world

20 Of welcome faces up and down I roved;
Questions, directions, counsel and advice
Flowed in upon me from all sides, fresh day
Of pride and pleasure! to myself I seemed
A man of business and expence, and went
From shop to shop, about my own affairs,
To Tutors or to Tailors, as befel,

From street to street with loose and careless heart.

I was the Dreamer, they the Dream; I roamed

Delighted, through the motley spectacle;
30 Gowns grave or gaudy, Doctors, Students, Streets,
Lamps, Gateways, Flocks of Churches, Courts and Towers:
Strange transformation for a mountain Youth,
A northern Villager. As if by word
Of magic or some Fairy's power, at once
Behold me rich in monies, and attired
In splendid clothes, with hose of silk, and hair
Glittering like rimy trees when frost is keen.
My lordly Dressing-gown I pass it by,
With other signs of manhood which supplied 40 The lack of beard. – The weeks went roundly on,
With invitations, suppers, wine, and fruit,
Smooth housekeeping within, and all without

Liberal and suiting Gentleman's array!

The Evangelist St John my Patron was,

Three gloomy Courts are his; and in the first

Was my abiding-place, a nook obscure!
Right underneath, the College kitchens made
A humming sound, less tuneable than bees,
But hardly less industrious; with shrill notes
50 Of sharp command and scolding intermixed.
Near me was Trinity's loquacious Clock,
Who never let the Quarters, night or day,
Slip by him unproclaimed, and told the hours
Twice over with a male and female voice.
Her pealing organ was my neighbour too;
And, from my Bedroom, I in moonlight nights
Could see, right opposite, a few yards off,
The Antechapel, where the Statue stood

Of Newton, with his Prism and silent Face.

60

Of College labours, of the Lecturer's Room,

All studded round, as thick as chairs could stand,
With loyal Students, faithful to their books,
Half-and-half Idlers, hardy Recusants,
And honest Dunces; – of important Days,
Examinations, when the Man was weighed
As in the balance, – of excessive hopes,
Tremblings withal, and commendable fears,
Small jealousies, and triumphs good or bad
I make short mention; things they were which then 70 I did not love, nor do I love them now.
Such glory was but little sought by me,
And little won. But it is right to say
That even so early, from the first crude days
Of settling-time in this my new abode,
Not seldom I had melancholy thoughts,
From personal and family regards,

Wishing to hope without a hope; some fears
About my future worldly maintenance,
And, more than all, a strangeness in my mind,
80 A feeling that I was not for that hour,
Nor for that place. But wherefore be cast down?
Why should I grieve? I was a chosen Son.
For hither I had come with holy powers
And faculties, whether to work or feel:
To apprehend all passions and all moods
Which time, and place, and season do impress
Upon the visible universe, and work
Like changes there by force of my own mind.
I was a Freeman; in the purest sense
90 Was free, and to majestic ends was strong.
I do not speak of learning, moral truth,
Or understanding; 'twas enough for me
To know that I was otherwise endowed.
When the first glitter of the show was passed,
And the first dazzle of the taper light,
As if with a rebound my mind returned
Into its former self. Oft did I leave
My Comrades, and the Crowd, Buildings and Groves,
And walked along the fields, the level fields,
100 With Heaven's blue concave reared above my head;
And now it was, that, thro' such change entire,
And this first absence from those shapes sublime
Wherewith I had been conversant, my mind
Seemed busier in itself than heretofore;
At least, I more directly recognised
My powers and habits: let me dare to speak
A higher language, say that now I felt
The strength and consolation which were mine.
As if awakened, summoned, rouzed, constrained,
110 I looked for universal things; perused
The common countenance of earth and heaven;

And, turning the mind in upon itself,
Pored, watched, expected, listened; spread my thoughts
And spread them with a wider creeping; felt Incumbences more awful, visitings
Of the Upholder, of the tranquil Soul,
Which underneath all passion lives secure
A steadfast life. But peace! it is enough
To notice that I was ascending now 120
To such community with highest truth.

A track pursuing not untrod before,

From deep analogies by thought supplied,
Or consciousnesses not to be subdued,
To every natural form, rock, fruit or flower,
Even the loose stones that cover the high-way,
I gave a moral life, I saw them feel,
Or linked them to some feeling: the great mass
Lay bedded in a quickening soul, and all
That I beheld respired with inward meaning.
130 Thus much for the one Presence, and the Life
Of the great whole; suffice it here to add
That whatsoe'er of Terror or of Love,
Or Beauty, Nature's daily face put on
From transitory passion, unto this
I was as wakeful, even, as waters are
To the sky's motion; in a kindred sense
Of passion was obedient as a lute
That waits upon the touches of the wind.
So was it with me in my solitude;
140 So often among multitudes of men.
Unknown, unthought of, yet I was most rich,
I had a world about me; 'twas my own,

I made it; for it only lived to me,
And to the God who looked into my mind.
Such sympathies would sometimes shew themselves
By outward gestures and by visible looks.
Some called it madness: such, indeed, it was,
If child-like fruitfulness in passing joy,
If steady moods of thoughtfulness, matured
150 To inspiration, sort with such a name;
If prophesy be madness; if things viewed
By Poets in old time, and higher up
By the first men, earth's first inhabitants,
May in these tutored days no more be seen
With undisordered sight: but leaving this
It was no madness: for I had an eye
Which in my strongest workings, evermore
Was looking for the shades of difference
As they lie hid in all exterior forms,
160 Near or remote, minute or vast, an eye
Which from a stone, a tree, or withered leaf,
To the broad ocean and the azure heavens,
Spangled with kindred multitudes of stars,
Could find no surface where its power might sleep,
Which spake perpetual logic to my soul,
And by an unrelenting agency
Did bind my feelings, even as in a chain.

.....

Beside the pleasant Mills of Trompington

I laughed with Chaucer; in the hawthorn shade
Heard him (while birds were warbling) tell his tales
Of amorous passion. And that gentle Bard,
280 Chosen by the Muses for their Page of State,
Sweet Spenser, moving through his clouded heaven
With the moon's beauty and the moon's soft pace,

I called him Brother, Englishman, and Friend.
Yea, our blind Poet, who, in his later day,
Stood almost single, uttering odious truth,
Darkness before, and danger's voice behind;
Soul awful! if the earth has ever lodged
An awful Soul, I seemed to see him here
Familiarly, and in his Scholar's dress
290 Bounding before me, yet a stripling Youth,
A Boy, no better, with his rosy cheeks
Angelical, keen eye, courageous look,

And conscious step of purity and pride.

Among the Band of my Compeers was one,

My class-fellow at School, whose chance it was To lodge in the Apartments which had been,
Time out of mind, honored by Milton's name;
The very shell reputed of the abode
Which he had tenanted. O temperate Bard!
300 One afternoon, the first time I set foot
In this thy innocent Nest and Oratory,
Seated with others in a festive ring
Of common-place convention, I to thee
Poured out libations, to thy memory drank,
Within my private thoughts, till my brain reeled,
Never so clouded by the fumes of wine
Before that hour, or since. Thence forth I ran
From that assembly, through a length of streets,
Ran, Ostrich-like, to reach our Chapel Door
310 In not a desperate or opprobrious time,
Albeit long after the importunate Bell
Had stopped, with wearisome Cassandra voice
No longer haunting the dark winter night.

Call back, O Friend! a moment to thy mind,
The place itself and fashion of the rites.
Upshouldering in a dislocated lump,
With shallow ostentatious carelessness,
My Surplice, gloried in, and yet despised,
I clove in pride through the inferior throng
320 Of the plain Burghers, who in audience stood
On the last skirts of their permitted ground,
Beneath the pealing Organ. Empty thoughts!
I am ashamed of them; and that great Bard,
And thou, O Friend! who in thy ample mind
Hast stationed me for reverence and love,
Ye will forgive the weakness of that hour
In some of its unworthy vanities,
Brother of many more.

.....

Book Four

Summer Vacation

.....

As one who hangs down-bending from the side

Of a slow-moving Boat, upon the breast
Of a still water, solacing himself
250 With such discoveries as his eye can make,
Beneath him, in the bottom of the deeps,
Sees many beauteous sights, weeds, fishes, flowers,
Grots, pebbles, roots of trees, and fancies more,
Yet often is perplexed, and cannot part
The shadow from the substance, rocks and sky,
Mountains and clouds, from that which is indeed
The region, and the things which there abide
In their true dwelling; now is crossed by gleam
Of his own image, by a sunbeam now, 260 And motions that are sent he knows not whence,
Impediments that make his task more sweet;
– Such pleasant office have we long pursued
Incumbent o'er the surface of past time
With like success; nor have we often looked
On more alluring shows (to me, at least,)
More soft, or less ambiguously described,
Than those which now we have been passing by,
And where we still are lingering. Yet, in spite
Of all these new employments of the mind,

270 There was an inner falling-off. I loved,
Loved deeply, all that I had loved before,
More deeply even than ever; but a swarm
Of heady thoughts jostling each other, gawds,
And feast, and dance, and public revelry,
And sports and games (less pleasing in themselves,
Than as they were a badge glossy and fresh
Of manliness and freedom) these did now
Seduce me from the firm habitual quest
Of feeding pleasures, from that eager zeal,
280 Those yearnings which had every day been mine,
A wild, unworldly-minded Youth, given up
To Nature and to Books, or, at the most,
From time to time, by inclination shipped,
One among many, in societies,
That were, or seemed, as simple as myself.
But now was come a change; it would demand
Some skill, and longer time than may be spared,
To paint, even to myself, these vanities,
And how they wrought. But, sure it is that now 290 Contagious air did oft environ me,
Unknown among these haunts in former days.
The very garments that I wore appeared
To prey upon my strength, and stopped the course
And quiet stream of self-forgetfulness.
Something there was about me that perplexed
The authentic sight of reason, pressed too closely
On that religious dignity of mind,
That is the very faculty of truth;
Which wanting, either, from the very first,
300 A function never lighted up, or else
Extinguished, Man, a creature great and good,
Seems but a pageant plaything with wild claws,
And this great frame of breathing elements
A senseless Idol.

That vague heartless chace

Of trivial pleasures was a poor exchange
For Books and Nature at that early age.
'Tis true some casual knowledge might be gained
Of character or life; but at that time,
Of manners put to school I took small note,
310 And all my deeper passions lay elsewhere.
Far better had it been to exalt the mind
By solitary study, to uphold
Intense desire by thought and quietness.
And yet, in chastisement of these regrets,
The memory of one particular hour
Doth here rise up against me. In a throng,
A festal company of Maids and Youths,
Old Men, and Matrons staid, promiscuous rout,
A medley of all tempers, I had passed
320 The night in dancing, gaiety and mirth;
With din of instruments, and shuffling feet,
And glancing forms, and tapers glittering,
And unaimed prattle flying up and down,
Spirits upon the stretch, and here and there
Slight shocks of young love-liking interspersed,
That mounted up like joy into the head,
And tingled through the veins. Ere we retired,
The cock had crowed, the sky was bright with day.
Two miles I had to walk along the fields
330 Before I reached my home. Magnificent
The morning was, a memorable pomp,
More glorious than I ever had beheld.
The Sea was laughing at a distance; all
The solid Mountains were as bright as clouds,
Grain-tinctured, drenched in empyrean light;
And, in the meadows and the lower grounds,

Was all the sweetness of a common dawn,
Dews, vapours, and the melody of birds,
And Labourers going forth into the fields.
340 – Ah! need I say, dear Friend, that to the brim
My heart was full? I made no vows, but vows
Were then made for me; bond unknown to me
Was given, that I should be, else sinning greatly, A dedicated Spirit. On I walked

In blessedness, which even yet remains.

Strange rendezvous my mind was at that time,

A party-coloured shew of grave and gay,
Solid and light, short-sighted and profound,
Of inconsiderate habits and sedate,
350 Consorting in one mansion unreprieved.
I knew the worth of that which I possessed,
Though slighted and misused. Besides, in truth,
That Summer, swarming as it did with thoughts
Transient and loose, yet wanted not a store
Of primitive hours, when, by these hindrances
Unthwarted, I experienced in myself
Conformity as just as that of old
To the end and written spirit of God's works,

Whether held forth in Nature or in Man.

360

From many wanderings that have left behind

Remembrances not lifeless, I will here
Single out one, then pass to other themes.

A favorite pleasure hath it been with me,

From time of earliest youth, to walk alone
Along the public Way, when, for the night
Deserted, in its silence it assumes
A character of deeper quietness
Than pathless solitudes. At such an hour
Once, ere these summer months were passed away, 370 I slowly mounted up a steep ascent
Where the road's wat'ry surface, to the ridge
Of that sharp rising, glittered in the moon
And seemed before my eyes another stream
Creeping with silent lapse to join the brook
That murmured in the valley. On I went Tranquil, receiving in my own despite Amusement, as I slowly passed along,
From such near objects as from time to time
Perforce intruded on the listless sense
380 Quiescent, and disposed to sympathy
With an exhausted mind, worn out by toil,
And all unworthy of the deeper joy
Which waits on distant prospect, cliff, or sea,
The dark blue vault, and universe of stars.
Thus did I steal along that silent road,
My body from the stillness drinking in
A restoration like the calm of sleep,
But sweeter far. Above, before, behind,
Around me, all was peace and solitude;
390 I looked not round, nor did the solitude
Speak to my eye; but it was heard and felt.
O happy state! what beauteous pictures now
Rose in harmonious imagery – they rose
As from some distant region of my soul
And came along like dreams; yet such as left

Obscurely mingled with their passing forms
A consciousness of animal delight,
A self-possession felt in every pause
And every gentle movement of my frame.

400

While thus I wandered, step by step led on,

It chanced a sudden turning of the road
Presented to my view an uncouth shape,
So near, that, slipping back into the shade
Of a thick hawthorn, I could mark him well,
Myself unseen. He was of stature tall,
A foot above man's common measure tall,
Stiff in his form, and upright, lank and lean;
A man more meagre, as it seemed to me,
Was never seen abroad by night or day.
410 His arms were long, and bare his hands; his mouth
Shewed ghastly in the moonlight; from behind
A milestone propped him, and his figure seemed Half-sitting, and half-standing. I could mark
That he was clad in military garb,
Though faded, yet entire. He was alone,
Had no attendant, neither Dog, nor Staff,
Nor knapsack; in his very dress appeared
A desolation, a simplicity
That seemed akin to solitude. Long time
420 Did I peruse him with a mingled sense
Of fear and sorrow. From his lips, meanwhile,
There issued murmuring sounds, as if of pain
Or of uneasy thought; yet still his form
Kept the same steadiness, and at his feet
His shadow lay, and moved not. In a Glen Hard by, a Village stood, whose roofs and doors
Were visible among the scattered trees,
Scarce distant from the spot an arrow's flight.

I wished to see him move, but he remained 430 Fixed to his place, and still from time to time
Sent forth a murmuring voice of dead complaint,
Groans scarcely audible. Without self-blame
I had not thus prolonged my watch; and now,
Subduing my heart's specious cowardise,
I left the shady nook where I had stood,
And hailed him. Slowly from his resting-place
He rose, and with a lean and wasted arm
In measured gesture lifted to his head,
Returned my salutation, then resumed
440 His station as before. And when, ere long,
I asked his history, he in reply
Was neither slow nor eager, but unmoved,
And with a quiet, uncomplaining voice,
A stately air of mild indifference,
He told, in simple words, a Soldier's tale.
That in the Tropic Islands he had served,
Whence he had landed scarcely ten days past,
That on his landing he had been dismissed,
And now was travelling to his native home.
450 At this, I turned and looked towards the Village
But all were gone to rest; the fires all out;
And every silent window to the Moon
Shone with a yellow glitter. 'No one there,'
Said I, 'is waking, we must measure back
The way which we have come: behind yon wood
A Labourer dwells, and, take it on my word
He will not murmur should we break his rest,
And with a ready heart will give you food
And lodging for the night.' At this he stooped, 460 And from the ground took up an oaken Staff,
By me yet unobserved, a Traveller's Staff,
Which, I suppose, from his slack hand had dropped,

And lain till now neglected in the grass.

Towards the Cottage without more delay

We shaped our course. As it appeared to me,
He travelled without pain, and I beheld
With ill-suppressed astonishment his tall
And ghastly figure moving at my side;
Nor, while we journeyed thus could I forbear
470 To question him of what he had endured
From hardship, battle, or the pestilence.
He, all the while, was in demeanour calm,
Concise in answer; solemn and sublime
He might have seemed, but that in all he said
There was a strange half-absence, and a tone
Of weakness and indifference, as of one
Remembering the importance of his theme
But feeling it no longer. We advanced
Slowly, and ere we to the wood were come 480 Discourse had ceased. Together on we passed,
In silence, through the shades, gloomy and dark;
Then, turning up along an open field
We gained the Cottage. At the door I knocked,
Calling aloud, 'my Friend, here is a Man
By sickness overcome; beneath your roof
This night let him find rest, and give him food,
If food he need, for he is faint and tired.'
Assured that now my Comrade would repose
In comfort, I entreated that henceforth
490 He would not linger in the public ways
But ask for timely furtherance and help
Such as his state required. At this reproof,
With the same ghastly mildness in his look,
He said, 'My trust is in the God of Heaven

And in the eye of him that passes me.'
The Cottage door was speedily unlocked,
And now the Soldier touched his hat again
With his lean hand, and in a voice that seemed
To speak with a reviving interest,
500 Till then unfelt, he thanked me; I returned
The blessing of the poor unhappy Man;
And so we parted. Back I cast a look,
And lingered near the door a little space;
Then sought with quiet heart my distant home.

Book Five

Books

.....

A thought is with me sometimes, and I say,
'Should earth by inward throes be wrenched throughout, 30 Or fire be sent from far to wither all
Her pleasant habitations, and dry up
Old Ocean in his bed left singed and bare,
Yet would the living Presence still subsist
Victorious; and composure would ensue,
And kindlings like the morning; presage sure,
Though slow, perhaps, of a returning day.'
But all the meditations of mankind,
Yea, all the adamantine holds of truth,
By reason built, or passion, which itself
40 Is highest reason in a soul sublime;
The consecrated works of Bard and Sage,
Sensuous or intellectual, wrought by men,
Twin labourers and heirs of the same hopes,
Where would they be? Oh! why hath not the mind
Some element to stamp her image on
In nature somewhat nearer to her own?
Why, gifted with such powers to send abroad

Her spirit, must it lodge in shrines so frail?

One day, when in the hearing of a Friend,

50 I had given utterance to thoughts like these,
He answered with a smile that, in plain truth,
'Twas going far to seek disquietude;
But on the front of his reproof, confessed
That he, at sundry seasons, had himself
Yielded to kindred hauntings. And forthwith
Added, that once upon a summer's noon,
While he was sitting in a rocky cave
By the sea-side, perusing, as it chanced,
The famous History of the Errant Knight
60 Recorded by Cervantes, these same thoughts
Came to him; and to height unusual rose
While listlessly he sate, and having closed
The Book, had turned his eyes towards the Sea.
On Poetry and geometric Truth,
The knowledge that endures, upon these two,
And their high privilege of lasting life,
Exempt from all internal injury,
He mused: upon these chiefly: and at length,
His senses yielding to the sultry air,
70 Sleep seized him, and he passed into a dream.
He saw before him an Arabian Waste,
A Desert, and he fancied that himself
Was sitting there in the wide wilderness,
Alone, upon the sands. Distress of mind
Was growing in him when, behold! at once
To his great joy a Man was at his side,
Upon a dromedary mounted high.
He seemed an Arab of the Bedouin Tribes;
A Lance he bore, and underneath one arm
80 A Stone, and, in the opposite hand, a Shell
Of a surpassing brightness. Much rejoiced
The dreaming Man that he should have a Guide
To lead him through the Desert; and he thought,

While questioning himself what this strange freight
Which the Newcomer carried through the Waste
Could mean, the Arab told him that the Stone,
To give it in the language of the Dream,
Was Euclid's Elements; 'and this,' said he,
'This other,' pointing to the Shell, 'this Book 90 Is something of more worth.' 'And, at the word,
The Stranger,' said my Friend continuing,
'Stretched forth the Shell towards me, with command
That I should hold it to my ear. I did so,
And heard that instant in an unknown Tongue,
Which yet I understood, articulate sounds,
A loud prophetic blast of harmony,
An Ode, in passion uttered, which foretold
Destruction to the Children of the Earth
By deluge now at hand. No sooner ceased
100 The Song, but with calm look, the Arab said
That all was true; that it was even so
As had been spoken; and that he himself
Was going then to bury those two Books:
The one that held acquaintance with the stars,
And wedded man to man by purest bond
Of nature, undisturbed by space or time;
The other that was a God, yea many Gods,
Had voices more than all the winds, and was
A joy, a consolation, and a hope.'
110 My friend continued, 'Strange as it may seem,
I wondered not, although I plainly saw
The one to be a Stone, the other a Shell,
Nor doubted once but that they both were Books,
Having a perfect faith in all that passed.
A wish was now engendered in my fear
To cleave unto this Man, and I begged leave
To share his errand with him. On he passed
Not heeding me; I followed, and took note

That he looked often backward with wild look,
120 Grasping his twofold treasure to his side.
Upon a Dromedary, Lance in rest,
He rode, I keeping pace with him, and now
I fancied that he was the very Knight
Whose Tale Cervantes tells, yet not the Knight,
But was an Arab of the Desert too;
Of these was neither, and was both at once.
His countenance, meanwhile, grew more disturbed,
And, looking backwards when he looked, I saw
A glittering light, and asked him whence it came.
130 "It is," said he, "the waters of the deep Gathering upon us"; quickening then his pace
He left me: I called after him aloud;
He heeded not; but with his twofold charge
Beneath his arm, before me full in view
I saw him riding o'er the Desert Sands,
With the fleet waters of the drowning world
In chace of him; whereat I waked in terror,
And saw the Sea before me, and the Book,

In which I had been reading at my side.'

140

Full often, taking from the world of sleep

This Arab Phantom, which my Friend beheld,
This Semi-Quixote, I to him have given
A substance, fancied him a living man,
A gentle Dweller in the Desert, crazed
By love and feeling and internal thought,
Protracted among endless solitudes;
Have shaped him, in the oppression of his brain,
Wandering upon this quest, and thus equipped.
And I have scarcely pitied him; have felt

150 A reverence for a Being thus employed,
And thought that in the blind and awful lair
Of such a madness, reason did lie couched.
Enow there are on earth to take in charge
Their Wives, their Children, and their virgin Loves,
Or whatsoever else the heart holds dear;
Enow to think of these; yea, will I say,
In sober contemplation of the approach
Of such great overthrow, made manifest
By certain evidence, that I, methinks,
160 Could share that Maniac's anxiousness, could go
Upon like errand. Oftentimes, at least,
Me hath such deep entrancement half-possessed,
When I have held a volume in my hand,
Poor earthly casket of immortal Verse!

Shakespeare, or Milton, Labourers divine!

.....

290

My drift hath scarcely,

I fear, been obvious; for I have recoiled
From showing as it is the monster birth
Engendered by these too industrious times.
Let few words paint it: 'tis a Child, no Child,
But a dwarf Man; in knowledge, virtue, skill;
In what he is not, and in what he is,
The noontide shadow of a man complete;
A worshipper of worldly seemliness,
Not quarrelsome; for that were far beneath
300 His dignity; with gifts he bubbles o'er
As generous as a fountain; selfishness
May not come near him, gluttony or pride;
The wandering Beggars propagate his name,

Dumb creatures find him tender as a nun.
Yet deem him not for this a naked dish
Of goodness merely; he is garnished out.
Arch are his notices, and nice his sense
Of the ridiculous; deceit and guile,
Meanness and falsehood, he detects, can treat
310 With apt and graceful laughter; nor is blind
To the broad follies of the licensed world;
Though shrewd, yet innocent himself withal
And can read lectures upon innocence.
He is fenced round, nay armed, for aught we know
In panoply complete; and fear itself,
Natural or supernatural alike,
Unless it leap upon him in a dream,
Touches him not. Briefly, the moral part
Is perfect, and in learning and in books 320 He is a prodigy. His discourse moves slow,
Massy and ponderous as a prison door,
Tremendously embossed with terms of art;
Rank growth of propositions overruns
The Stripling's brain; the path in which he treads
Is choked with grammars; cushion of Divine
Was never such a type of thought profound
As is the pillow where he rests his head.
The Ensigns of the Empire which he holds,
The globe and sceptre of his royalties,
330 Are telescopes, and crucibles, and maps.
Ships he can guide across the pathless sea,
And tell you all their cunning; he can read
The inside of the earth, and spell the stars;
He knows the policies of foreign Lands;
Can string you names of districts, cities, towns,
The whole world over, tight as beads of dew
Upon a gossamer thread; he sifts, he weighs;
Takes nothing upon trust: his Teachers stare,

The Country People pray for God's good grace,
340 And tremble at his deep experiments.
All things are put to question; he must live
Knowing that he grows wiser every day,
Or else not live at all; and seeing, too,
Each little drop of wisdom as it falls
Into the dimpling cistern of his heart.
Meanwhile old Grandame Earth is grieved to find
The playthings, which her love designed for him,
Unthought of: in their woodland beds the flowers

Weep, and the river sides are all forlorn.

350

Now this is hollow, 'tis a life of lies

From the beginning, and in lies must end.
Forth bring him to the air of common sense,
And, fresh and shewy as it is, the Corps
Slips from us into powder. Vanity
That is his soul, there lives he, and there moves;
It is the soul of every thing he seeks;
That gone, nothing is left which he can love.
Nay, if a thought of purer birth should rise
To carry him towards a better clime,
360 Some busy helper still is on the watch
To drive him back and pound him like a Stray
Within the pinfold of his own conceit,
Which is his home, his natural dwelling place.
Oh! give us once again the Wishing-Cap
Of Fortunatus, and the invisible Coat
Of Jack the Giant-killer, Robin Hood,
And Sabra in the forest with St George!
The child, whose love is here, at least, doth reap 370

One precious gain, that he forgets himself.

These mighty workmen of our later age

Who with a broad highway have overbridged
The froward chaos of futurity,
Tamed to their bidding; they who have the art
To manage books, and things, and make them work
Gently on infant minds, as does the sun
Upon a flower; the Tutors of our Youth
The Guides, the Wardens of our faculties,
And Stewards of our labour, watchful men
And skilful in the usury of time,
380 Sages, who in their prescience would controul
All accidents, and to the very road
Which they have fashioned would confine us down,
Like engines, when will they be taught
That in the unreasoning progress of the world
A wiser Spirit is at work for us,
A better eye than theirs, most prodigal
Of blessings, and most studious of our good,

Even in what seem our most unfruitful hours?

There was a Boy, ye knew him well, ye Cliffs

390 And Islands of Winander! many a time
At evening, when the stars had just begun
To move along the edges of the hills,
Rising or setting, would he stand alone
Beneath the trees, or by the glimmering Lake,
And there, with fingers interwoven, both hands

Pressed closely, palm to palm, and to his mouth
Uplifted, he, as through an instrument,
Blew mimic hootings to the silent owls
That they might answer him. – And they would shout
400 Across the wat'ry Vale, and shout again,
Responsive to his call, with quivering peals,
And long halloos, and screams, and echoes loud
Redoubled and redoubled; concourse wild
Of mirth and jocund din! And when it chanced
That pauses of deep silence mocked his skill,
Then sometimes, in that silence, while he hung
Listening, a gentle shock of mild surprize
Has carried far into his heart the voice
Of mountain torrents; or the visible scene
Would enter unawares into his mind
410 With all its solemn imagery, its rocks,
Its woods, and that uncertain Heaven, received
Into the bosom of the steady Lake.

This Boy was taken from his Mates, and died

In childhood, ere he was full ten years old.
– Fair are the woods, and beauteous is the spot,
The Vale where he was born; the Churchyard hangs
Upon a Slope above the Village School,
And there, along that bank, when I have passed
420 At evening, I believe that oftentimes
A full half-hour together I have stood
Mute – looking at the Grave in which he lies.
Even now, methinks, before my sight I have
That self-same Village Church; I see her sit,
The throned Lady spoken of erewhile,
On her green hill; forgetful of this Boy
Who slumbers at her feet; forgetful, too,
Of all her silent neighbourhood of graves,

And listening only to the gladsome sounds
430 That, from the rural School ascending, play
Beneath her and about her. May she long
Behold a race of young Ones like to those With whom I herded! (easily, indeed,
We might have fed upon a fatter soil
Of Arts and Letters, but be that forgiven)
A race of real children, not too wise,
Too learned, or too good; but wanton, fresh,
And bandied up and down by love and hate;
Fierce, moody, patient, venturous, modest, shy;
440 Mad at their sports like withered leaves in winds;
Though doing wrong, and suffering, and full oft
Bending beneath our life's mysterious weight
Of pain and fear; yet still in happiness
Not yielding to the happiest upon earth.
Simplicity in habit, truth in speech,
Be these the daily strengtheners of their minds!
May books and nature be their early joy!
And knowledge, rightly honored with that name,
Knowledge not purchased with the loss of power!
450

Well do I call to mind the very week

When I was first entrusted to the care
Of that sweet Valley; when its paths, its shores,
And brooks, were like a dream of novelty
To my half-infant thoughts; that very week
While I was roving up and down alone,
Seeking I knew not what, I chanced to cross
One of those open fields, which, shaped like ears,
Make green peninsulas on Esthwaite's Lake:
Twilight was coming on; yet through the gloom,
460 I saw distinctly on the opposite Shore
A heap of garments, left, as I supposed,

By one who there was bathing; long I watched,
But no one owned them; meanwhile the calm Lake
Grew dark, with all the shadows on its breast,
And, now and then, a fish up-leaping, snapped
The breathless stillness. The succeeding day, (Those unclaimed garments telling a plain Tale)
Went there a Company, and, in their Boat
Sounded with grappling irons, and long poles.
470 At length, the dead Man, 'mid that beauteous scene
Of trees, and hills and water, bolt upright
Rose with his ghastly face; a spectre shape
Of terror even! and yet no vulgar fear,
Young as I was, a Child not nine years old,
Possessed me, for my inner eye had seen
Such sights before, among the shining streams
Of Fairy Land, the Forests of Romance:
Thence came a spirit hallowing what I saw
With decoration and ideal grace;
480 A dignity, a smoothness, like the works
Of Grecian Art, and purest Poesy.

.....

Here must I pause: this only will I add,

From heart-experience, and in the humblest sense
610 Of modesty, that he, who, in his youth
A wanderer among the woods and fields,
With living Nature hath been intimate,
Not only in that raw unpractised time
Is stirred to ecstasy, as others are,
By glittering verse; but, he doth furthermore,
In measure only dealt out to himself,
Receive enduring touches of deep joy
From the great Nature that exists in works
Of mighty Poets. Visionary Power

620 Attends upon the motions of the winds
Embodied in the mystery of words;
There darkness makes abode, and all the host
Of shadowy things do work their changes there,
As in a mansion like their proper home;
Even forms and substances are circumfused
By that transparent veil with light divine;
And through the turnings intricate of Verse,
Present themselves as objects recognised,
In flashes, and with a glory scarce their own.

.....

Book Six

Cambridge and the Alps

.....

When the third Summer brought its liberty
A Fellow Student and myself, he too
340 A Mountaineer, together sallied forth
And, Staff in hand, on foot pursued our way
Towards the distant Alps. An open slight
Of College cares and study was the scheme,
Nor entertained without concern for those
To whom my worldly interests were dear:
But Nature then was sovereign in my heart,
And mighty forms seizing a youthful Fancy
Had given a charter to irregular hopes.
In any age, without an impulse sent 350 From work of Nations, and their goings-on,
I should have been possessed by like desire:
But 'twas a time when Europe was rejoiced,
France standing on the top of golden hours,
And human nature seeming born again.
Bound, as I said, to the Alps, it was our lot
To land at Calais on the very eve
Of that great federal Day; and there we saw,
In a mean City, and among a few,
How bright a face is worn when joy of one 360 Is joy of tens of millions. Southward thence We took our way direct through Hamlets, Towns,
Gaudy with reliques of that Festival,

Flowers left to wither on triumphal Arcs,
And window-Garlands. On the public roads,
And once three days successively through paths
By which our toilsome journey was abridged,
Among sequestered villages we walked,
And found benevolence and blessedness
Spread like a fragrance everywhere, like Spring 370 That leaves no corner of the Land untouched.

.....

Sweet coverts did we cross of pastoral life,
Enticing Vallies, greeted them, and left
Too soon, while yet the very flash and gleam 440 Of salutation were not passed away.
Oh! sorrow for the Youth who could have seen
Unchastened, unsubdued, unawed, unraised
To patriarchal dignity of mind
And pure simplicity of wish and will,
Those sanctified abodes of peaceful Man.
My heart leaped up when first I did look down
On that which was first seen of these deep haunts,
A green recess, an aboriginal vale
Quiet, and lorded over and possessed
450 By naked huts, wood-built, and sown like tents
Or Indian cabins over the fresh lawns,
And by the river side. That day we first
Beheld the summit of Mont Blanc, and grieved
To have a soulless image on the eye
Which had usurped upon a living thought
That never more could be: the wondrous Vale
Of Chamouny did, on the following dawn,
With its dumb cataracts and streams of ice,
A motionless array of mighty waves,
460 Five rivers broad and vast, make rich amends,
And reconciled us to realities.
There small birds warble from the leafy trees,

The Eagle soareth in the element;
There doth the Reaper bind the yellow sheaf,
The Maiden spread the haycock in the sun,
While Winter like a tamed Lion walks
Descending from the mountain to make sport
Among the cottages by beds of flowers.
.....

Yet still in me, mingling with these delights

Was something of stern mood, an under-thirst 490 Of vigour, never utterly asleep.
Far different dejection once was mine,
A deep and genuine sadness then I felt;
The circumstances I will here relate
Even as they were. Upturning with a Band
Of Travellers, from the Valais we had clomb
Along the road that leads to Italy;
A length of hours, making of these our Guides,
Did we advance, and having reached an Inn
Among the mountains, we together ate
500 Our noon's repast, from which the Travellers rose, Leaving us at the Board. Ere long we followed,
Descending by the beaten road that led
Right to a rivulet's edge, and there broke off.
The only track now visible was one
Upon the further side, right opposite,
And up a lofty Mountain. This we took
After a little scruple, and short pause,
And climbed with eagerness, though not, at length,
Without surprise and some anxiety
510 On finding that we did not overtake
Our Comrades gone before. By fortunate chance,
While every moment now encreased our doubts,
A Peasant met us, and from him we learned

That to the place which had perplexed us first
We must descend, and there should find the road
Which in the stony channel of the Stream
Lay a few steps, and then along its Banks;
And further, that thenceforward all our course
Was downwards, with the current of that Stream.
520 Hard of belief, we questioned him again,
And all the answers which the Man returned
To our inquiries, in their sense and substance,
Translated by the feelings which we had,

Ended in this; that we had crossed the Alps.

Imagination! lifting up itself

Before the eye and progress of my Song
Like an unfathered vapour; here that Power,
In all the might of its endowments, came
Athwart me; I was lost as in a cloud,
530 Halted, without a struggle to break through.
And now recovering, to my Soul I say
'I recognise thy glory'. In such strength
Of usurpation, in such visitings
Of awful promise, when the light of sense
Goes out in flashes that have shewn to us
The invisible world, doth Greatness make abode,
There harbours whether we be young or old.
Our destiny, our nature, and our home,
Is with infinitude, and only there;
540 With hope it is, hope that can never die,
Effort, and expectation, and desire,
And something evermore about to be.
The mind beneath such banners militant
Thinks not of spoils or trophies, nor of aught

That may attest its prowess, blest in thoughts
That are their own perfection and reward,
Strong in itself, and in the access of joy

Which hides it like the overflowing Nile.

The dull and heavy slackening that ensued

550 Upon those tidings by the Peasant given
Was soon dislodged; downwards we hurried fast,
And entered with the road which we had missed
Into a narrow chasm. The brook and road
Were fellow-travellers in this gloomy Pass,
And with them did we journey several hours
At a slow step. The immeasurable height
Of woods decaying, never to be decayed,
The stationary blasts of water-falls,
And every where along the hollow rent
560 Winds thwarting winds, bewildered and forlorn,
The torrents shooting from the clear blue sky,
The rocks that muttered close upon our ears,
Black drizzling crags that spake by the way-side
As if a voice were in them, the sick sight
And giddy prospect of the raving stream,
The unfettered clouds and region of the heavens,
Tumult and peace, the darkness and the light
Were all like workings of one mind, the features
Of the same face, blossoms upon one tree,
570 Characters of the great Apocalypse,
The types and symbols of Eternity,
Of first and last, and midst, and without end.

.....

Book Seven

Residence in London

.....

Returned from that excursion, soon I bade

Farewell for ever to the private Bowers
Of gownèd Students, quitted these, no more 60 To enter them, and pitched my vagrant tent,
A casual dweller and at large, among
The unfenced regions of society.

Yet undetermined to what plan of life

I should adhere, and seeming thence to have
A little space of intermediate time
Loose and at full command, to London first
I turned if not in calmness nevertheless
In no disturbance of excessive hope,
At ease from all ambition personal,
70 Frugal as there was need, and though self-willed,
Yet temperate and reserved, and wholly free
From dangerous passions. 'Twas at least two years
Before this season when I first beheld
That mighty place, a transient visitant;
And now it pleased me my abode to fix
Single in the wide waste, to have a house
It was enough (what matter for a home?)

That owned me, living chearfully abroad,
With fancy on the stir from day to day,
80
And all my young affections out of doors.

.....

Those days are now

My theme; and, 'mid the numerous scenes which they Have left behind them, foremost I am crossed
Here by remembrance of two figures: One
A rosy Babe, who, for a twelvemonth's space
Perhaps, had been of age to deal about 370 Articulate prattle, Child as beautiful
As ever sate upon a Mother's knee;
The other was the Parent of that Babe;
But on the Mother's cheek the tints were false,
A painted bloom. 'Twas at a Theatre
That I beheld this Pair; the Boy had been
The pride and pleasure of all lookers-on
In whatsoever place, but seemed in this
A sort of Alien scattered from the clouds.
Of lusty vigour, more than infantine,
380 He was in limbs, in face a Cottage rose
Just three parts blown; a Cottage Child, but ne'er
Saw I, by Cottage or elsewhere, a Babe
By Nature's gifts so honored. Upon a Board
Whence an attendant of the Theatre
Served out refreshments, had this Child been placed,
And there he sate, environed with a Ring
Of chance Spectators, chiefly dissolute men
And shameless women; treated and caressed,
Ate, drank, and with the fruit and glasses played,
390 While oaths, indecent speech, and ribaldry

Were rife about him as are songs of birds
In spring-time after showers. The Mother, too,
Was present! but of her I know no more
Than hath been said, and scarcely at this time
Do I remember her. But I behold
The lovely Boy as I beheld him then,
Among the wretched and the falsely gay,
Like one of those who walked with hair unsinged
Amid the fiery furnace. He hath since
400 Appeared to me oft times as if embalmed
By Nature; through some special privilege,
Stopped at the growth he had; destined to live,
To be, to have been, come and go, a Child
And nothing more, no partner in the years
That bear us forward to distress and guilt,
Pain and abasement, beauty in such excess
Adorned him in that miserable place.

.....

O Friend! one feeling was there which belonged

To this great City, by exclusive right;
How often in the overflowing Streets,
Have I gone forward with the Crowd, and said
Unto myself, the face of every one
That passes by me is a mystery.
Thus have I looked, nor ceased to look, oppressed 600 By thoughts of what, and whither, when and how,
Until the shapes before my eyes became
A second-sight procession, such as glides
Over still mountains, or appears in dreams;
And all the ballast of familiar life,
The present, and the past; hope, fear; all stays,
All laws of acting, thinking, speaking man
Went from me, neither knowing me, nor known.

And once, far-travelled in such mood, beyond
The reach of common indications, lost
610 Amid the moving pageant, 'twas my chance
Abruptly to be smitten with the view
Of a blind Beggar, who, with upright face,
Stood propped against a Wall, upon his Chest
Wearing a written paper, to explain
The story of the Man, and who he was.
My mind did at this spectacle turn round
As with the might of waters, and it seemed
To me that in this Label was a type,
Or emblem, of the utmost that we know,
620 Both of ourselves and of the universe;
And, on the shape of the unmoving man,
His fixèd face and sightless eyes, I looked

As if admonished from another world.

Though reared upon the base of outward things,

These, chiefly, are such structures as the mind
Builds for itself. Scenes different there are,
Full-formed, which take, with small internal help,
Possession of the faculties; the peace
Of night, for instance, the solemnity
630 Of nature's intermediate hours of rest,
When the great tide of human life stands still,
The business of the day to come unborn,
Of that gone by, locked up as in the grave;
The calmness, beauty, of the spectacle,
Sky, stillness, moonshine, empty streets, and sounds
Unfrequent as in desarts; at late hours
Of winter evenings when unwholesome rains
Are falling hard, with people yet astir,

The feeble salutation from the voice
640 Of some unhappy Woman, now and then Heard as we pass; when no one looks about,
Nothing is listened to. But these, I fear,
Are falsely catalogued, things that are, are not,
Even as we give them welcome, or assist,
Are prompt, or are remiss. What say you then,
To times, when half the City shall break out
Full of one passion, vengeance, rage, or fear,
To executions, to a Street on fire,
Mobs, riots, or rejoicings? From these sights
650 Take one, an annual Festival, the Fair
Holden where Martyrs suffered in past time,
And named of Saint Bartholomew; there see
A work that's finished to our hands, that lays,
If any spectacle on earth can do,
The whole creative powers of man asleep!
For once the Muse's help will we implore,
And she shall lodge us, wafted on her wings,
Above the press and danger of the Crowd,
Upon some Showman's platform: what a hell
660 For eyes and ears! what anarchy and din
Barbarian and infernal! 'tis a dream,
Monstrous in colour, motion, shape, sight, sound.
Below, the open space, through every nook
Of the wide area, twinkles, is alive
With heads; the midway region and above
Is thronged with staring pictures, and huge scrolls,
Dumb proclamations of the prodigies;
And chattering monkeys dangling from their poles,
And children whirling in their roundabouts;
670 With those that stretch the neck, and strain the eyes,
And crack the voice in rivalry, the crowd
Inviting; with buffoons against buffoons
Grimacing, writhing, screaming; him who grinds

The hurdy-gurdy, at the fiddle weaves;
Rattles the salt-box, thumps the kettle-drum,
And him who at the trumpet puffs his cheeks,
The silver-collared Negro with his timbrel,
Equestrians, Tumblers, Women, Girls, and Boys,
Blue-breeched, pink-vested, and with towering plumes.
680 – All moveables of wonder from all parts,
Are here, Albinos, painted Indians, Dwarfs,
The Horse of Knowledge, and the learned Pig,
The Stone-eater, the Man that swallows fire,
Giants, Ventriloquists, the Invisible Girl,
The Bust that speaks, and moves its goggling eyes,
The Wax-work, Clock-work, all the marvellous craft
Of modern Merlins, wild Beasts, Puppet-shows,
All out-o'-th'way, far-fetched, perverted things,
All freaks of Nature, all Promethean thoughts
690 Of man; his dullness, madness, and their feats,
All jumbled up together to make up
This Parliament of Monsters. Tents and Booths
Meanwhile, as if the whole were one vast Mill,
Are vomiting, receiving, on all sides,

Men, Women, three-years' Children, Babes in arms.

Oh, blank confusion! and a type not false

Of what the mighty City is itself
To all except a Straggler here and there,
To the whole swarm of its inhabitants;
700 An undistinguishable world to men,
The slaves unrespited of low pursuits,
Living amid the same perpetual flow
Of trivial objects, melted and reduced
To one identity, by differences

That have no law, no meaning, and no end;
Oppression under which even highest minds
Must labour, whence the strongest are not free.
But though the picture weary out the eye,
By nature an unmanageable sight,
710 It is not wholly so to him who looks
In steadiness, who hath among least things
An under-sense of greatest; sees the parts
As parts, but with a feeling of the whole.
This, of all acquisitions first, awaits
On sundry and most widely different modes
Of education; nor with least delight
On that through which I passed. Attention comes,
And comprehensiveness and memory,
From early converse with the works of God
720 Among all regions; chiefly where appear
Most obviously simplicity and power.
By influence habitual to the mind
The mountain's outline and its steady form
Gives a pure grandeur, and its presence shapes
The measure and the prospect of the soul
To majesty; such virtue have the forms
Perennial of the ancient hills; nor less
The changeful language of their countenances
Gives movement to the thoughts, and multitude, 730 With order and relation. This, if still,
As hitherto, with freedom I may speak,
And the same perfect openness of mind,
Not violating any just restraint,
As I would hope, of real modesty,
This did I feel in that vast receptacle.
The Spirit of Nature was upon me here;
The Soul of Beauty and enduring life
Was present as a habit, and diffused,
Through meagre lines and colours, and the press

740 Of self-destroying, transitory things,
Composure and ennobling harmony.

.....

Book Eight
Retrospect. – Love of Nature Leading to Love of Mankind

.....

With deep devotion, Nature, did I feel
In that great City what I owed to thee,
High thoughts of God and Man, and love of Man,
Triumphant over all those loathsome sights
Of wretchedness and vice; a watchful eye,
Which with the outside of our human life
Not satisfied, must read the inner mind.
For I already had been taught to love
70 My Fellow-beings, to such habits trained
Among the woods and mountains, where I found
In thee a gracious Guide, to lead me forth
Beyond the bosom of my Family,
My Friends and youthful Playmates. 'Twas thy power
That raised the first complacency in me,
And noticeable kindliness of heart,
Love human to the Creature in himself
As he appeared, a Stranger in my path,
Before my eyes a Brother of this world;
80 Thou first didst with those motions of delight
Inspire me. – I remember, far from home
Once having strayed, while yet a very Child,
I saw a sight, and with what joy and love!
It was a day of exhalations, spread
Upon the mountains, mists and steam-like fogs

Redounding everywhere, not vehement,
But calm and mild, gentle and beautiful,
With gleams of sunshine on the eyelet spots
And loop-holes of the hills, wherever seen,
90 Hidden by quiet process, and as soon
Unfolded, to be huddled up again:
Along a narrow Valley and profound
I journeyed, when, aloft above my head,
Emerging from the silvery vapours, lo!
A Shepherd and his Dog! in open day:
Girt round with mists they stood and looked about
From that enclosure small, inhabitants
Of an aerial Island floating on,
As seemed, with that Abode in which they were,
100 A little pendant area of grey rocks,
By the soft wind breathed forward. With delight
As bland almost, one Evening I beheld,
And at as early age (the spectacle
Is common, but by me was then first seen)
A Shepherd in the bottom of a Vale
Towards the centre standing, who with voice,
And hand waved to and fro as need required
Gave signal to his Dog, thus teaching him
To chace along the mazes of steep crags
110 The Flock he could not see: and so the Brute
Dear Creature! with a Man's intelligence
Advancing, or retreating on his steps,
Through every pervious strait, to right or left,
Thridded a way unbaffled; while the Flock
Fled upwards from the terror of his Bark
Through rocks and seams of turf with liquid gold
Irradiate, that deep farewell light by which
The setting sun proclaims the love he bears
To mountain regions.

.....

the rural custom

And manners which it was my chance to see
In childhood were severe and unadorned,
The unluxuriant produce of a life
Intent on little but substantial needs,
210 Yet beautiful, and beauty that was felt.
But images of danger, and distress,
And suffering, these took deepest hold of me,
Man suffering among awful Powers, and Forms;
Of this I heard and saw enough to make
The imagination restless; nor was free
Myself from frequent perils; nor were tales
Wanting, the tragedies of former times,
Or hazards and escapes, which in my walks
I carried with me among crags and woods
220 And mountains; and of these may here be told

One, as recorded by my Household Dame.

‘At the first falling of autumnal snow

A Shepherd and his Son one day went forth' (Thus did the Matron's Tale begin) ‘to seek A Straggler of their Flock. They both had ranged Upon this service the preceding day
All over their own pastures and beyond,
And now, at sun-rise sallying out again,
Renewed their search begun, where from Dove Crag,
230 Ill home for bird so gentle, they looked down
On Deep-dale Head, and Brothers-water, named
From those two Brothers that were drowned therein.
Thence, northward, having passed by Arthur's Seat,

To Fairfield's highest summit; on the right
Leaving St Sunday's Pike, to Grisedale Tarn
They shot, and over that cloud-loving Hill,
Seat Sandal, a fond lover of the clouds;
Thence up Helvellyn, a superior Mount
With prospect underneath of Striding-Edge,
240 And Grisedale's houseless Vale, along the brink
Of Russet Cove, and those two other Coves,
Huge skeletons of crags, which from the trunk
Of old Helvellyn spread their arms abroad,
And make a stormy harbour for the winds.
Far went those Shepherds in their devious quest,
From mountain ridges peeping as they passed
Down into every Glen: at length the Boy
Said, "Father, with your leave I will go back,
And range the ground which we have searched before."
250 So speaking, southward down the hill the Lad Sprang like a gust of wind, crying aloud
"I know where I shall find him." For take note,'
Said here my grey-haired Dame, 'that tho' the storm
Drive one of these poor Creatures miles and miles,
If he can crawl he will return again
To his own hills, the spots where, when a Lamb,
He learned to pasture at his Mother's side.
After so long a labour, suddenly
Bethinking him of this, the Boy
260 Pursued his way towards a brook whose course
Was through that unfenced tract of mountain-ground
Which to his Father's little Farm belonged,
The home and ancient Birth-right of their Flock.
Down the deep channel of the Stream he went,
Prying through every nook. Meanwhile the rain
Began to fall upon the mountain tops,
Thick storm and heavy which for three hours' space
Abated not; and all that time the Boy

Was busy in his search, until at length
270 He spied the Sheep upon a plot of grass,
An Island in the Brook. It was a place
Remote and deep, piled round with rocks where foot
Of man or beast was seldom used to tread;
But now, when everywhere the summer grass
Had failed, this one Adventurer, hunger-pressed,
Had left his Fellows, and made his way alone
To the green plot of pasture in the Brook.
Before the Boy knew well what he had seen
He leapt upon the Island with proud heart
280 And with a Prophet's joy. Immediately
The Sheep sprang forward to the further Shore
And was borne headlong by the roaring flood.
At this the Boy looked round him, and his heart
Fainted with fear; thrice did he turn his face
To either brink; nor could he summon up
The courage that was needful to leap back
Cross the tempestuous torrent; so he stood,
A prisoner on the Island, not without
More than one thought of death and his last hour:
290 Meanwhile the Father had returned alone
To his own house; and now at the approach
Of evening he went forth to meet his Son,
Conjecturing vainly for what cause the Boy
Had stayed so long. The Shepherd took his way
Up his own mountain grounds, where, as he walked
Along the Steep that overhung the Brook,
He seemed to hear a voice, which was again
Repeated, like the whistling of a kite.
At this, not knowing why, as oftentimes
300 Long afterwards he has been heard to say,
Down to the Brook he went, and tracked its course
Upwards among the o'erhanging rocks; nor thus
Had he gone far, ere he espied the Boy

Where on that little plot of ground he stood
Right in the middle of the roaring Stream,
Now stronger every moment and more fierce.
The sight was such as no one could have seen
Without distress and fear. The Shepherd heard
The outcry of his Son, he stretched his Staff
310 Towards him, bade him leap, which word scarce said
The Boy was safe within his Father's arms.'

.....

390

A rambling school-boy, thus

Have I beheld him; without knowing why,
Have felt his presence in his own domain
As of a Lord and Master; or a Power
Or Genius, under Nature, under God,
Presiding; and severest solitude
Seemed more commanding oft when he was there.
Seeking the Raven's Nest, and suddenly
Surprized with vapours, or on rainy days
When I have angled up the lonely brooks
400 Mine eyes have glanced upon him, few steps off,
In size a Giant, stalking through the fog,
His Sheep like Greenland Bears. At other times
When round some shady promontory turning,
His Form hath flashed upon me, glorified
By the deep radiance of the setting sun:
Or him have I descried in distant sky,
A solitary object and sublime,
Above all height! like an aerial Cross,
As it is stationed on some spiry Rock
410 Of the Chartreuse, for worship. Thus was Man
Ennobled outwardly before mine eyes,
And thus my heart at first was introduced
To an unconscious love and reverence

Of human nature; hence the human form
To me was like an index of delight,
Of grace and honour, power and worthiness.
Meanwhile, this Creature, spiritual almost
As those of Books; but more exalted far,
Far more of an imaginative form,
420 Was not a Corin of the groves, who lives
For his own fancies, or to dance by the hour
In coronal, with Phillis in the midst;
But, for the purposes of kind, a Man
With the most common; Husband, Father; learned,
Could teach, admonish, suffered with the rest
From vice and folly, wretchedness and fear;
Of this I little saw, cared less for it,
But something must have felt.

.....

Preceptress stern, that didst instruct me next,

London! to thee I willingly return.
680 Erewhile my Verse played only with the flowers
Enwrought upon thy mantle, satisfied
With this amusement, and a simple look
Of child-like inquisition, now and then
Cast upwards on thine eye to puzzle out
Some inner meanings, which might harbour there.
Yet did I not give way to this light mood
Wholly beguiled, as one incapable
Of higher things, and ignorant that high things
Were round me. Never shall I forget the hour 690 The moment rather say when having thridded
The labyrinth of suburban Villages,
At length I did unto myself first seem
To enter the great City. On the Roof
Of an itinerant Vehicle I sate,

With vulgar men about me, vulgar forms
Of houses, pavement, streets, of men and things,
Mean shapes on every side: but, at the time,
When to myself it fairly might be said,
The very moment that I seemed to know
700 The threshold now is overpassed, Great God!
That aught external to the living mind
Should have such mighty sway! yet so it was
A weight of Ages did at once descend
Upon my heart; no thought embodied, no
Distinct remembrances; but weight and power,
Power growing with the weight: alas! I feel
That I am trifling: 'twas a moment's pause.
All that took place within me, came and went
As in a moment, and I only now
710 Remember that it was a thing divine.

.....

And is not, too, that vast Abiding-place

Of human Creatures, turn where'er we may,
Profusely sown with individual sights
840 Of courage, and integrity, and truth,
And tenderness, which, here set off by foil,
Appears more touching. In the tender scenes Chiefly was my delight, and one of these
Never will be forgotten. 'Twas a Man,
Whom I saw sitting in an open Square
Close to an iron paling that fenced in
The spacious Grass-plot; on the corner stone
Of the low wall in which the pales were fixed
Sate this one Man, and with a sickly Babe 850 Upon his knee, whom he had thither brought
For sunshine, and to breathe the fresher air.
Of those who passed, and me who looked at him,

He took no note; but in his brawny Arms
(The Artificer was to the elbow bare,
And from his work this moment had been stolen)
He held the Child, and, bending over it
As if he were afraid both of the sun
And of the air which he had come to seek,
He eyed it with unutterable love.

Book Nine
Residence in France

.....

40 Through Paris lay my readiest path, and there
I sojourned a few days, and visited
In haste each spot of old and recent fame,
The latter chiefly, from the Field of Mars
Down to the Suburbs of St Anthony,
And from Mont Martyr southward, to the Dome
Of Geneviève. In both her clamorous Halls,
The National Synod and the Jacobins,
I saw the revolutionary Power
Toss like a Ship at anchor, rocked by storms;
50 The Arcades I traversed in the Palace huge
Of Orleans, coasted round and round the line
Of Tavern, Brothel, Gaming-house, and Shop,
Great rendezvous of worst and best, the walk
Of all who had a purpose, or had not;
I stared and listened with a stranger's ears
To Hawkers and Haranguers, hubbub wild!
And hissing Factionists with ardent eyes,
In knots, or pairs, or single, ant-like swarms
Of Builders and Subverters, every face 60 That hope or apprehension could put on,
Joy, anger, and vexation in the midst

Of gaiety and dissolute idleness.

Where silent zephyrs sported with the dust

Of the Bastille I sate in the open sun,
And from the rubbish gathered up a stone
And pocketed the relick in the guise
Of an Enthusiast, yet, in honest truth
Though not without some strong incumbences,
And glad (could living man be otherwise?)
70 I looked for something that I could not find,
Affecting more emotion than I felt,
For 'tis most certain that the utmost force
Of all these various objects which may shew
The temper of my mind as then it was Seemed less to recompense the Traveller's pains,
Less moved me, gave me less delight, than did
A single picture merely, hunted out
Among other sights, the Magdalene of le Brun,
A Beauty exquisitely wrought, fair face
80 And rueful, with its ever-flowing tears.

.....

A knot of military Officers,

That to a Regiment appertained which then
Was stationed in the City, were the chief
130 Of my associates: some of these wore Swords
Which had been seasoned in the Wars, and all
Were men well-born, at least laid claim to such Distinction, as the Chivalry of France.

.....

Among that band of Officers was one,

Already hinted at, of other mold,

A Patriot, thence rejected by the rest
And with an oriental loathing spurned,
As of a different Cast. A meeker Man
Than this lived never, or a more benign,
300 Meek, though enthusiastic to the height
Of highest expectation. Injuries
Made him more gracious, and his nature then
Did breathe its sweetness out most sensibly
As aromatic flowers on alpine turf
When foot hath crushed them. He through events
Of that great change wandered in perfect faith,
As through a Book, an old Romance or Tale
Of Fairy, or some dream of actions wrought
Behind the summer clouds. By birth he ranked 310 With the most noble, but unto the poor
Among mankind he was in service bound
As by some tie invisible, oaths professed
To a religious Order. Man he loved
As Man, and to the mean and the obscure,
And all the homely in their homely works,
Transferred a courtesy which had no air
Of condescension, but did rather seem
A passion and a gallantry, like that
Which he, a Soldier, in his idler day 320 Had payed to Woman. Somewhat vain he was,
Or seemed so, yet it was not vanity
But fondness, and a kind of radiant joy
That covered him about when he was bent
On works of love or freedom, or revolved
Complacently the progress of a cause
Whereof he was a part; yet this was meek
And placid, and took nothing from the Man
That was delightful. Oft in solitude
With him did I discourse about the end
330 Of civil government, and its wisest forms,

Of ancient prejudice, and chartered rights,
Allegiance, faith, and laws by time matured,
Custom and habit, novelty and change,
Of self-respect, and virtue in the Few
For patrimonial honour set apart,
And ignorance in the labouring Multitude.

.....

And when we chanced

One day to meet a hunger-bitten Girl,
Who crept along, fitting her languid self
Unto a Heifer's motion, by a cord
Tied to her arm, and picking thus from the lane
Its sustenance, while the Girl with her two hands
Was busy knitting, in a heartless mood
Of solitude, and at the sight my Friend
In agitation said, 'Tis against that 520 Which we are fighting,' I with him believed Devoutly that a spirit was abroad
Which could not be withstood, that poverty
At least like this, would in a little time
Be found no more, that we should see the earth
Unthwarted in her wish to recompense
The industrious, and the lowly Child of Toil,
All institutes for ever blotted out
That legalized exclusion, empty pomp
Abolished, sensual state and cruel power
530 Whether by edict of the one or few,
And finally, as sum and crown of all,
Should see the People having a strong hand
In making their own Laws, whence better days
To all mankind.

.....

Book Ten
Residence in France and French Revolution

.....

This was the time in which enflamed with hope,

To Paris I returned. Again I ranged,
40 More eagerly than I had done before,
Through the wide City, and in progress passed
The Prison where the unhappy Monarch lay,
Associate with his Children and his Wife
In bondage, and the Palace lately stormed
With roar of cannon and a numerous Host.
I crossed (a blank and empty area then)
The Square of the Carousel, few weeks back
Heaped up with dead and dying, upon these
And other sights looking as doth a man
50 Upon a volume whose contents he knows
Are memorable, but from him locked up,
Being written in a tongue he cannot read,
So that he questions the mute leaves with pain
And half upbraids their silence. But that night
When on my bed I lay, I was most moved
And felt most deeply in what world I was;
My room was high and lonely, near the roof
Of a large Mansion or Hotel, a spot
That would have pleased me in more quiet times, 60 Nor was it wholly without pleasure then.

With unextinguished taper I kept watch,
Reading at intervals. The fear gone by Pressed on me almost like a fear to come.
I thought of those September Massacres,
Divided from me by a little month,
And felt and touched them, a substantial dread;
The rest was conjured up from tragic fictions,
And mournful Calendars of true history,
Remembrances and dim admonishments.
70 'The horse is taught his manage, and the wind
Of heaven wheels round and treads in his own steps,
Year follows year, the tide returns again,
Day follows day, all things have second birth;
The earthquake is not satisfied at once.'
And in such way I wrought upon myself,
Until I seemed to hear a voice that cried,
To the whole City 'Sleep no more.' To this Add comments of a calmer mind, from which
I could not gather full security,
80 But at the best it seemed a place of fear,
Unfit for the repose of night,
Defenceless as a wood where tigers roam.
.....

When to my native Land

(After a whole year's absence) I returned
I found the air yet busy with the stir
Of a contention which had been raised up
Against the Traffickers in Negro blood,
An effort, which though baffled, nevertheless
Had called back old forgotten principles
Dismissed from service, had diffused some truths
And more of virtuous feeling through the heart 210 Of the English People. And no few of those

So numerous (little less in verity
Than a whole Nation crying with one voice)
Who had been crossed in their just intent
And righteous hope, thereby were well prepared
To let that journey sleep awhile, and join Whatever other Caravan appeared
To travel forward towards Liberty
With more success. For me that strife had ne'er
Fastened on my affections, nor did now
220 Its unsuccessful issue much excite
My sorrow, having laid this faith to heart,
That if France prospered good Men would not long
Pay fruitless worship to humanity,
And this most rotten branch of human shame,
Object, as seemed, of a superfluous pains,

Would fall together with its parent tree.

Such was my then belief, that there was one,

And only one solicitude for all.
And now the strength of Britain was put forth
230 In league with the confederated Host;
Not in my single self alone I found,
But in the minds of all ingenuous Youth,
Change and subversion from this hour. No shock
Given to my moral nature had I known
Down to that very moment; neither lapse
Nor turn of sentiment that might be named
A revolution, save at this one time;
All else was progress on the self-same path
On which with a diversity of pace
240 I had been travelling, this a stride at once Into another region. True it is,

'Twas not concealed with what ungracious eyes
Our native Rulers from the very first
Had looked upon regenerated France;
Nor had I doubted that this day would come.
But in such contemplation I had thought
Of general interests only, beyond this
Had never once foretasted the event.
Now had I other business, for I felt 250 The ravage of this most unnatural strife
In my own heart; there lay it like a weight
At enmity with all the tenderest springs
Of my enjoyments. I, who with the breeze
Had played, a green leaf on the blessed tree
Of my beloved Country – nor had wished
For happier fortune than to wither there –
Now from my pleasant station was cut off,
And tossed about in whirlwinds. I rejoiced,
Yea, afterwards, truth painful to record!
260 Exulted in the triumph of my soul
When Englishmen by thousands were o'erthrown,
Left without glory on the Field, or driven,
Brave hearts, to shameful flight. It was a grief,
Grief call it not, 'twas anything but that,
A conflict of sensations without name,
Of which he only who may love the sight
Of a Village Steeple as I do can judge,
When in the Congregation, bending all
To their great Father, prayers were offered up 270 Or praises for our Country's Victories,
And 'mid the simple worshippers, perchance,
I only, like an uninvited Guest
Whom no one owned sate silent, shall I add,
Fed on the day of vengeance yet to come!

.....

O Friend! few happier moments have been mine

Through my whole life than that when first I heard
That this foul Tribe of Moloch was o'erthrown,
And their chief Regent levelled with the dust.
470 The day was one which haply may deserve
A separate chronicle. Having gone abroad
From a small Village where I tarried then,
To the same far-secluded privacy
I was returning. Over the smooth Sands
Of Leven's ample Æstuary lay
My journey, and beneath a genial sun;
With distant prospect among gleams of sky
And clouds, and intermingled mountain tops,
In one inseparable glory clad,
480 Creatures of one ethereal substance, met
In Consistory, like a diadem
Or crown of burning Seraphs, as they sit
In the Empyrean. Underneath this show
Lay, as I knew, the nest of pastoral vales
Among whose happy fields I had grown up
From childhood. On the fulgent spectacle
Which neither changed, nor stirred, nor passed away,
I gazed, and with a fancy more alive
On this account, that I had chanced to find 490 That morning, ranging through the churchyard graves
Of Cartmell's rural Town, the place in which An honored Teacher of my youth was laid.
While we were Schoolboys he had died among us,
And was borne hither, as I knew, to rest
With his own Family. A plain Stone, inscribed
With name, date, office, pointed out the spot,
To which a slip of verses was subjoined,
(By his desire, as afterwards I learned)
A fragment from the Elegy of Gray.

500 A week, or little less, before his death
He had said to me, 'my head will soon lie low';
And when I saw the turf that covered him,
After the lapse of full eight years, those words,
With sound of voice, and countenance of the Man,
Came back upon me, so that some few tears
Fell from me in my own despite. And now,
Thus travelling smoothly o'er the level Sands,
I thought with pleasure of the Verses graven
Upon his Tombstone, saying to myself
510 He loved the Poets, and if now alive,
Would have loved me, as one not destitute
Of promise, nor belying the kind hope
Which he had formed, when I at his command,

Began to spin, at first, my toilsome Songs.

Without me and within, as I advanced,

All that I saw, or felt, or communed with
Was gentleness and peace. Upon a small
And rocky Island near, a fragment stood (Itself like a sea rock) of what had been 520 A Romish Chapel, where in ancient times Masses were said at the hour which suited those Who crossed the Sands with ebb of morning tide.
Not far from this still Ruin all the Plain
Was spotted with a variegated crowd
Of Coaches, Wains, and Travellers, horse and foot,
Wading, beneath the conduct of their Guide
In loose procession through the shallow Stream
Of inland water; the great Sea meanwhile
Was at safe distance, far retired. I paused,
530 Unwilling to proceed, the scene appeared

So gay and chearful; when a Traveller
Chancing to pass, I carelessly inquired
If any news were stirring; he replied
In the familiar language of the day
That, Robespierre was dead. Nor was a doubt,
On further question, left within my mind
But that the tidings were substantial truth;

That he and his supporters all were fallen.

Great was my glee of spirit, great my joy

540 In vengeance, and eternal justice, thus Made manifest. 'Come now ye golden times,'
Said I, forth-breathing on those open Sands
A Hymn of triumph, 'as the morning comes
Out of the bosom of the night, come Ye:
Thus far our trust is verified; behold!
They who with clumsy desperation brought Rivers of Blood, and preached that nothing else
Could cleanse the Augean Stable, by the might
Of their own helper have been swept away;
550 Their madness is declared and visible,
Elsewhere will safety now be sought, and Earth
March firmly towards righteousness and peace.'
Then schemes I framed more calmly, when and how
The madding Factions might be tranquillised,
And, though through hardships manifold and long,
The mighty renovation would proceed;
Thus, interrupted by uneasy bursts
Of exultation, I pursued my way
Along that very Shore which I had skimmed
560 In former times, when, spurring from the Vale
Of Nightshade, and St Mary's mouldering Fane,

And the Stone Abbot, after circuit made
In wantonness of heart, a joyous Crew
Of School-boys, hastening to their distant home,
Along the margin of the moonlight Sea,
We beat with thundering hoofs the level Sand.

.....

This was the time when, all things tending fast

To depravation, the Philosophy
That promised to abstract the hopes of man
Out of his feelings, to be fixed thenceforth
For ever in a purer element
810 Found ready welcome. Tempting region that
For Zeal to enter and refresh herself,
Where passions had the privilege to work,
And never hear the sound of their own names;
But, speaking more in charity, the dream
Was flattering to the young ingenuous mind
Pleased with extremes, and not the least with that Which makes the human Reason's naked self
The object of its fervour. What delight!
How glorious! in self-knowledge and self-rule,
820 To look through all the frailties of the world,
And, with a resolute mastery shaking off
The accidents of nature, time, and place,
That make up the weak being of the past,
Build social freedom on its only basis:
The freedom of the individual mind,
Which, to the blind restraint of general laws
Superior, magisterially adopts
One guide, the light of circumstances, flashed
Upon an independent intellect.

.....

Time may come

When some dramatic Story may afford
880 Shapes livelier to convey to thee, my Friend,
What then I learned, or think I learned, of truth,
And the errors into which I was betrayed
By present objects, and by reasonings false
From the beginning, inasmuch as drawn
Out of a heart which had been turned aside
From Nature by external accidents,
And which was thus confounded more and more,
Misguiding and misguided. Thus I fared,
Dragging all passions, notions, shapes of faith,
890 Like culprits to the bar, suspiciously
Calling the mind to establish in plain day
Her titles and her honours, now believing,
Now disbelieving, endlessly perplexed
With impulse, motive, right and wrong, the ground
Of moral obligation, what the rule
And what the sanction, till, demanding proof,
And seeking it in everything, I lost
All feeling of conviction, and, in fine,
Sick, wearied out with contrarities,
900 Yielded up moral questions in despair,
And for my future studies, as the sole
Employment of the enquiring faculty,
Turned towards mathematics, and their clear
And solid evidence – Ah! then it was
That Thou, most precious Friend! about this time
First known to me, didst lend a living help
To regulate my Soul, and then it was
That the belovèd Woman in whose sight
Those days were passed, now speaking in a voice
910 Of sudden admonition, like a brook
That does but cross a lonely road, and now

Seen, heard and felt, and caught at every turn,
Companion never lost through many a league,
Maintained for me a saving intercourse
With my true self; for, though impaired and changed
Much, as it seemed, I was no further changed
Than as a clouded, not a waning moon:
She, in the midst of all, preserved me still
A Poet, made me seek beneath that name
920 My office upon earth, and nowhere else;
And lastly, Nature's self, by human love
Assisted, through the weary labyrinth
Conducted me again to open day,
Revived the feelings of my earlier life,
Gave me that strength and knowledge full of peace,
Enlarged, and never more to be disturbed,
Which through the steps of our degeneracy,
All degradation of this age, hath still Upheld me, and upholds me at this day 930 In the catastrophe (for so they dream,
And nothing less) when, finally, to close
And rivet up the gains of France, a Pope
Is summoned in to crown an Emperor;
This last opprobrium, when we see the dog
Returning to his vomit, when the sun
That rose in splendour, was alive, and moved
In exultation among living clouds,
Hath put his function and his glory off,
And, turned into gewgaw, a machine,
940 Sets like an opera phantom.

.....

Book Eleven
Imagination, How Impaired and Restored

.....

There are in our existence spots of time,

Which with distinct pre-eminence retain
260 A renovating Virtue, whence, depressed
By false opinion and contentious thought,
Or aught of heavier and more deadly weight
In trivial occupations, and the round
Of ordinary intercourse, our minds
Are nourished and invisibly repaired;
A virtue by which pleasure is enhanced,
That penetrates, enables us to mount
When high, more high, and lifts us up when fallen.
This efficacious spirit chiefly lurks 270 Among those passages of life in which We have had deepest feeling that the mind
Is lord and master, and that outward sense
Is but the obedient servant of her will.
Such moments worthy of all gratitude,
Are scattered everywhere, taking their date
From our first childhood: in our childhood even Perhaps are most conspicuous. Life with me,
As far as memory can look back, is full
Of this beneficent influence.

At a time

280 When scarcely (I was then not six years old)
My hand could hold a bridle, with proud hopes
I mounted, and we rode towards the hills:
We were a pair of Horsemen; honest James
Was with me, my encourager and guide.
We had not travelled long ere some mischance
Disjoined me from my Comrade, and, through fear Dismounting, down the rough and stony Moor
I led my Horse, and stumbling on, at length
Came to a bottom, where in former times
290 A Murderer had been hung in iron chains.
The Gibbet-mast was mouldered down, the bones
And iron case were gone, but on the turf,
Hard by, soon after that fell deed was wrought,
Some unknown hand had carved the Murderer's name.
The monumental writing was engraven
In times long past, and still from year to year
By superstition of the neighbourhood
The grass is cleared away; and to this hour
The letters are all fresh and visible.
300 Faltering, and ignorant where I was, at length
I chanced to espy those characters inscribed
On the green sod: forthwith I left the spot
And, reascending the bare Common, saw
A naked Pool that lay beneath the hills,
The Beacon on the summit, and more near,
A Girl who bore a Pitcher on her head
And seemed with difficult steps to force her way
Against the blowing wind. It was, in truth,
An ordinary sight; but I should need
310 Colours and words that are unknown to man
To paint the visionary dreariness
Which, while I looked all round for my lost guide,

Did at that time invest the naked Pool,
The Beacon on the lonely Eminence,
The Woman, and her garments vexed and tossed
By the strong wind. When, in a blessed season
With those two dear Ones, to my heart so dear,
When in the blessed time of early love,
Long afterwards, I roamed about 320 In daily presence of this very scene,
Upon the naked pool and dreary crags,
And on the melancholy Beacon, fell
The spirit of pleasure and youth's golden gleam;
And think ye not with radiance more divine
From these remembrances, and from the power
They left behind? So feeling comes in aid
Of feeling, and diversity of strength
Attends us, if but once we have been strong.
Oh! mystery of Man, from what a depth
330 Proceed thy honours! I am lost, but see
In simple childhood something of the base
On which thy greatness stands; but this I feel,
That from thyself it is that thou must give,
Else never canst receive. The days gone by
Come back upon me from the dawn almost
Of life: the hiding-places of my power
Seem open; I approach, and then they close;
I see by glimpses now; when age comes on,
May scarcely see at all, and I would give,
340 While yet we may, as far as words can give,
A substance and a life to what I feel:
I would enshrine the spirit of the past
For future restoration. Yet another
Of these to me affecting incidents
With which we will conclude.

One Christmas-time,

The day before the Holidays began,
Feverish, and tired, and restless, I went forth
Into the fields, impatient for the sight
Of those two Horses which should bear us home,
350 My Brothers and myself. There was a crag,
An Eminence, which from the meeting-point
Of two highways ascending, overlooked
At least a long half-mile of those two roads,
By each of which the expected Steeds might come,
The choice uncertain. Thither I repaired
Up to the highest summit. 'Twas a day
Stormy, and rough, and wild, and on the grass
I sate, half-sheltered by a naked wall;
Upon my right hand was a single sheep,
360 A whistling hawthorn on my left, and there,
With those companions at my side, I watched,
Straining my eyes intensely, as the mist
Gave intermitting prospect of the wood
And plain beneath. Ere I to School returned
That dreary time, ere I had been ten days
A dweller in my Father's House, he died,
And I and my two Brothers, Orphans then,
Followed his Body to the Grave. The event
With all the sorrow which it brought appeared
370 A chastisement; and when I called to mind
That day so lately passed, when from the crag
I looked in such anxiety of hope,
With trite reflections of morality,
Yet in the deepest passion, I bowed low
To God, who thus corrected my desires;
And afterwards, the wind and sleety rain,
And all the business of the elements,
The single sheep, and the one blasted tree,
And the bleak music of that old stone wall,

380 The noise of wood and water, and the mist
Which on the line of each of those two Roads
Advanced in such indisputable shapes,
All these were spectacles and sounds to which I often would repair and thence would drink
As at a fountain; and I do not doubt
That in this later time, when storm and rain
Beat on my roof at midnight, or by day
When I am in the woods, unknown to me
The workings of my spirit thence are brought.

.....

Book Twelve
Same Subject (continued)

.....

I love a public road: few sights there are

That please me more; such object hath had power
O'er my imagination since the dawn
Of childhood, when its disappearing line,
Seen daily afar off, on one bare steep
150 Beyond the limits which my feet had trod,
Was like a guide into eternity,
At least to things unknown and without bound.
Even something of the grandeur which invests
The Mariner who sails the roaring sea
Through storm and darkness, early in my mind
Surrounded, too, the Wanderers of the Earth,
Grandeur as much, and loveliness far more.
Awed have I been by strolling Bedlamites;
From many other uncouth Vagrants passed
160 In fear, have walked with quicker step; but why
Take note of this? When I began to inquire,
To watch and question those I met, and held
Familiar talk with them, the lonely roads
Were schools to me in which I daily read
With most delight the passions of mankind,
There saw into the depth of human souls,
Souls that appear to have no depth at all

To vulgar eyes. And now convinced at heart
How little that to which alone we give 170 The name of education hath to do
With real feeling and just sense, how vain
A correspondence with the talking world
Proves to the most, and called to make good search
If man's estate, by doom of Nature yoked
With toil, is therefore yoked with ignorance,
If virtue be indeed so hard to rear,
And intellectual strength so rare a boon,
I prized such walks still more; for there I found
Hope to my hope, and to my pleasure peace 180 And steadiness; and healing and repose
To every angry passion. There I heard,
From mouths of lowly men and of obscure
A tale of honour; sounds in unison

With loftiest promises of good and fair.

There are who think that strong affections, love

Known by whatever name, is falsely deemed
A gift, to use a term which they would use,
Of vulgar Nature, that its growth requires
Retirement, leisure, language purified
190 By manners thoughtful and elaborate,
That whoso feels such passion in excess
Must live within the very light and air
Of elegances that are made by man.
True is it, where oppression worse than death
Salutes the Being at his birth, where grace
Of culture hath been utterly unknown,
And labour in excess and poverty
From day to day pre-occupy the ground

Of the affections, and to Nature's self 200 Oppose a deeper nature, there indeed,
Love cannot be; nor does it easily thrive
In cities, where the human heart is sick,
And the eye feeds it not, and cannot feed:

Thus far, no further, is that inference good.

Yes, in those wanderings deeply did I feel

How we mislead each other, above all
How Books mislead us, looking for their fame
To judgments of the wealthy Few, who see
By artificial lights, how they debase
210 The Many for the pleasure of those few,
Effeminately level down the truth
To certain general notions for the sake
Of being understood at once, or else
Through want of better knowledge in the men
Who frame them, flattering thus our self-conceit
With pictures that ambitiously set forth
The differences, the outside marks by which Society has parted man from man,
Neglectful of the universal heart.

.....

Be mine to follow with no timid step
250 Where knowledge leads me; it shall be my pride
That I have dared to tread this holy ground,
Speaking no dream but things oracular,
Matter not lightly to be heard by those Who to the letter of the outward promise
Do read the invisible soul, by men adroit
In speech and for communion with the world
Accomplished, minds whose faculties are then

Most active when they are most eloquent,
And elevated most when most admired.
260 Men may be found of other mold than these,
Who are their own upholders, to themselves
Encouragement, and energy and will,
Expressing liveliest thoughts in lively words
As native passion dictates. Others, too,
There are among the walks of homely life
Still higher, men for contemplation framed,
Shy, and unpractised in the strife of phrase,
Meek men, whose very souls perhaps would sink
Beneath them, summoned to such intercourse:
270 Theirs is the language of the heavens, the power,
The thought, the image, and the silent joy;
Words are but under-agents in their souls;
When they are grasping with their greatest strength
They do not breathe among them: this I speak
In gratitude to God, who feeds our hearts
For his own service, knoweth, loveth us
When we are unregarded by the world.

.....

Book Thirteen

Conclusion

In one of these excursions, travelling then
Through Wales on foot, and with a youthful Friend,
I left Bethkelet's huts at couching-time,
And westward took my way to see the sun
Rise from the top of Snowdon. Having reached
The Cottage at the Mountain's foot, we there
Rouzed up the Shepherd, who by ancient right
Of office is the Stranger's usual Guide,
And after short refreshment sallied forth.

10

It was a Summer's night, a close warm night,

Wan, dull and glaring, with a dripping mist
Low-hung and thick that covered all the sky,
Half threatening storm and rain; but on we went Unchecked, being full of heart and having faith
In our tried Pilot. Little could we see,
Hemmed round on every side with fog and damp,
And, after ordinary travellers' chat
With our Conductor, silently we sank
Each into commerce with his private thoughts.

20 Thus did we breast the ascent, and by myself
Was nothing either seen or heard the while
Which took me from my musings, save that once
The Shepherd's Cur did to his own great joy
Unearth a hedgehog in the mountain crags

Round which he made a barking turbulent.
This small adventure, for even such it seemed
In that wild place and at the dead of night,
Being over and forgotten, on we wound
In silence as before. With forehead bent
30 Earthward, as if in opposition set
Against an enemy, I panted up
With eager pace, and no less eager thoughts.
Thus might we wear perhaps an hour away,
Ascending at loose distance each from each,
And I, as chanced, the foremost of the Band;
When at my feet the ground appeared to brighten,
And with a step or two seemed brighter still;
Nor had I time to ask the cause of this,
For instantly a Light upon the turf
40 Fell like a flash: I looked about, and lo!
The Moon stood naked in the Heavens, at height
Immense above my head, and on the shore
I found myself of a huge sea of mist,
Which, meek and silent, rested at my feet.
A hundred hills their dusky backs upheaved
All over this still Ocean, and beyond,
Far, far beyond, the vapours shot themselves,
In headlands, tongues, and promontory shapes,
Into the Sea, the real Sea, that seemed 50 To dwindle and give up its majesty,
Usurped upon as far as sight could reach.
Meanwhile, the Moon looked down upon this shew
In single glory, and we stood, the mist
Touching our very feet; and from the shore
At distance not the third part of a mile
Was a blue chasm; a fracture in the vapour,
A deep and gloomy breathing-place, through which Mounted the roar of waters, torrents, streams
Innumerable, roaring with one voice.

60 The universal spectacle throughout
Was shaped for admiration and delight,
Grand in itself alone, but in that breach
Through which the homeless voice of waters rose,
That dark deep thoroughfare, had Nature lodged

The Soul, the Imagination of the whole.

A meditation rose in me that night

Upon the lonely Mountain when the scene
Had passed away, and it appeared to me
The perfect image of a mighty Mind,
70 Of one that feeds upon infinity,
That is exalted by an underpresence,
The sense of God, or whatso'er is dim
Or vast in its own being; above all
One function of such mind had Nature there Exhibited by putting forth, and that
With circumstance most awful and sublime,
That domination which she oftentimes
Exerts upon the outward face of things,
So moulds them, and endues, abstracts, combines,
80 Or by abrupt and unhabitual influence
Doth make one object so impress itself
Upon all others, and pervade them so,
That even the grossest minds must see and hear
And cannot chuse but feel. The Power which these Acknowledge when thus moved, which Nature thus Thrusts forth upon the senses, is the express
Resemblance, in the fulness of its strength
Made visible, a genuine Counterpart
And Brother of the glorious faculty
90 Which higher minds bear with them as their own.

This is the very spirit in which they deal
With all the objects of the universe;
They from their native selves can send abroad
Like transformations, for themselves create
A like existence, and, whene'er it is Created for them, catch it by an instinct;
Them the enduring and the transient both
Serve to exalt; they build up greatest things
From least suggestions, ever on the watch,
100 Willing to work and to be wrought upon.
They need not extraordinary calls
To rouse them, in a world of life they live,
By sensible impressions not enthralled,
But quickened, roused, and made thereby more fit
To hold communion with the invisible world.
Such minds are truly from the Deity,
For they are Powers; and hence the highest bliss
That can be known is theirs, the consciousness
Of whom they are habitually infused
110 Through every image, and through every thought,
And all impressions; hence religion, faith,
And endless occupation for the soul
Whether discursive or intuitive;
Hence sovereignty within and peace at will,
Emotion which best foresight need not fear,
Most worthy then of trust when most intense;
Hence cheerfulness in every act of life;
Hence truth in moral judgements and delight
That fails not, in the external universe.

.....

From love, for here

150 Do we begin and end, all grandeur comes,
All truth and beauty, from pervading love,

That gone, we are as dust. Behold the fields
In balmy spring-time, full of rising flowers
And happy creatures; see that Pair, the Lamb
And the Lamb's Mother, and their tender ways
Shall touch thee to the heart; in some green bower
Rest, and be not alone, but have thou there
The One who is thy choice of all the world,
There linger, lulled and lost, and rapt away,
160 Be happy to thy fill; thou call'st this love
And so it is, but there is higher love
Than this, a love that comes into the heart
With awe and a diffusive sentiment;
Thy love is human merely; this proceeds

More from the brooding Soul, and is divine.

This love more intellectual cannot be

Without Imagination, which, in truth,
Is but another name for absolute strength
And clearest insight, amplitude of mind, 170 And reason in her most exalted mood.
This faculty hath been the moving soul
Of our long labour: we have traced the stream
From darkness, and the very place of birth
In its blind cavern, whence is faintly heard
The sound of waters; followed it to light
And open day, accompanied its course
Among the ways of Nature, afterwards
Lost sight of it bewildered and engulfed,
Then given it greeting, as it rose once more
180 With strength, reflecting in its solemn breast
The works of man and face of human life;
And lastly, from its progress have we drawn

The feeling of life endless, the one thought

By which we live, Infinity and God.

Whether to me shall be allotted life;

And with life power to accomplish aught of worth

Sufficient to excuse me in men's sight

For having given this Record of myself,

390 Is all uncertain: but, beloved Friend,

When, looking back thou seest, in clearer view

Than any sweetest sight of yesterday,

That summer when on Quantock's grassy Hills

Far ranging, and among the sylvan Coombs,

Thou in delicious words, with happy heart,

Didst speak the Vision of that Ancient Man,

The bright-eyed Mariner, and rueful woes

Didst utter of the Lady Christabel;

And I, associate in such labour, walked

400 Murmuring of him who, joyous hap! was found,

After the perils of his moonlight ride

Near the loud Waterfall; or her who sate

In misery near the miserable Thorn;

When thou dost to that summer turn thy thoughts,

And hast before thee all which then we were,

To thee, in memory of that happiness

It will be known, by thee at least, my Friend,

Felt, that the history of a Poet's mind

Is labour not unworthy of regard:

410 To thee the work shall justify itself.

.....

Oh! yet a few short years of useful life,

And all will be complete, thy race be run,
430 Thy monument of glory will be raised.
Then, though, too weak to tread the ways of truth,
This Age fall back to old idolatry,
Though men return to servitude as fast
As the tide ebbs, to ignominy and shame
By Nations sink together, we shall still Find solace in the knowledge which we have,
Blessed with true happiness if we may be United helpers forward of a day
Of firmer trust, joint-labourers in the work
440 (Should Providence such grace to us vouchsafe)
Of their redemption, surely yet to come.
Prophets of Nature, we to them will speak
A lasting inspiration, sanctified
By reason and by truth; what we have loved
Others will love; and we may teach them how;
Instruct them how the mind of man becomes
A thousand times more beautiful than the earth
On which he dwells, above this Frame of things (Which, 'mid all revolutions in the hopes 450 And fears of men, doth still remain unchanged)
In beauty exalted, as it is itself
Of substance and of fabric more divine.

Notes

ABBREVIATIONS

C

Samuel Taylor Coleridge

DW

Dorothy Wordsworth

DWJ

Dorothy Wordsworth, The Grasmere Journals, ed. Pamela Woof (Oxford 1991)

IF Note

Notes on W's own poems compiled in 1843 for his friend Isabella Fenwick
The Fenwick Notes of William Wordsworth, ed. Jared Curtis (London, 19

LB 1798

Lyrical Ballads (1798)

LB 1800

Lyrical Ballads, 2 vols. (1800)

P2V

Poems, in Two Volumes (1807)

Poems 1815

Poems, 2 vols. (1815)

Poems 1820

Miscellaneous Poems, 4 vols. (1820)

Prose

The Prose Works of William Wordsworth, ed. W. J. B. Owen and Jane Worthington Smyser, 3 vols. (Oxford, 1974)

W

William Wordsworth

Date only is given in introduction and notes to letters of W, DW and C. The standard editions are: Letters of William and Dorothy Wordsworth: The Early Years, 1787–1805, ed. Chester L. Shaver (1967); The Middle Years, 1806–11, ed. Mary Moorman (1969); The Middle Years, 1812–20, ed. Mary Moorman and Alan G. Hill (1970); The Later Years, 1821–50, ed. Alan G. Hill, 4 vols. (1978–88); A Supplement of New Letters, ed. Alan G. Hill (1993); Collected Letters of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, ed. Earl Leslie Griggs, 6 vols. (1956–71).

As all commentators must do, I draw very gratefully on the work done by Mark L. Reed in Wordsworth: The Chronology of the Early Years 1770–1799 (1967) and Wordsworth: The Chronology of the Middle Years 1800–1815 (1975) and by the individual editors of the Cornell Wordsworth Series, general editor Stephen M. Parrish, 20 vols. continuing (1975–). I have relied particularly heavily on The Ruined Cottage and The Pedlar, ed. James Butler (1979), Lyrical Ballads, and

Other Poems, 1797–1800, ed. James Butler and Karen Green (1992), Poems, in Two Volumes, and Other Poems, 1800–1807, ed. Jared Curtis (1983), and Shorter Poems, ed. Carl H. Ketcham (1989).

Old Man Travelling

Composed between latter half of 1796 and early June 1797. Published LB 1798. An 'overflowing', according to W, of work on what became 'The Old Cumberland Beggar' (IF Note). In 1800 the title became 'Animal Tranquillity and Decay, a Sketch'. The closing lines 15–20 were dropped after 1805.

19 Falmouth: Sea-port in Cornwall.

The Ruined Cottage

‘The Ruined Cottage’ occupied W over many years. Composed 1797–8, it was revised in 1802 and 1804, and further revised for publication in 1814 when it was incorporated into The Excursion as the opening book. W did not ever publish the poem under the title ‘The Ruined Cottage’, although it is called that in MS. See Butler's edition cited above for full details of the poem's history. The action is set ‘in the South-West of England’ (IF Note), where the Ws lived 1795–8.

232 moving accidents: From William Shakespeare, Othello, I. iii.135, the Arden Shakespeare.

264 purse of gold: Including the money that Robert was paid as an inducement to enlist.

295 trotting brooks: From Robert Burns's (1759–96) To W. S—n, Ochiltree (1786), stanza 15, line 3.

482 reft house: From verb ‘reave’, meaning ‘to despoil’. Now obsolete. ‘Reft’, past participle, means ‘ruined’, ‘despoiled’.

A Night-Piece

Composed early 1798 ‘on the road between Nether Stowey and Alfoxden, extempore’ (IF Note) and published Poems 1815. This text is taken from the earliest completed manuscript. C was living at Nether Stowey and the Ws at Alfoxden, both places near the Quantock Hills in Somerset. DW's journal entry for 25 January 1798 records the natural phenomenon depicted in the poem.

The Old Cumberland Beggar

Composed early 1798, when, according to W, ‘political economists were... beginning their war upon mendicity in all its forms, and by implication, if not directly, on Almsgiving also’ (IF Note). Published LB 1800.

34 wheel: Spinning-wheel.

127 Decalogue: The Ten Commandments.

151 scrip: A small bag.

Lines Written at a Small Distance from my House

Composed March 1798. Published LB 1798. The house was Alfoxden House.

Goody Blake and Harry Gill

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. The incident is drawn from Erasmus Darwin's Zoönomia; or, the Laws of Organic Life (1794–6), but the Ws knew rural distress at first hand. When they first settled in Dorset DW noted in a letter, 'The peasants are miserably poor; their cottages are shapeless structures... indeed they are not at all beyond what might be expected in savage life' (30 November 1795).

The Thorn

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. In the IF Note W recalled that the poem:

‘Arose out of my observing, on the ridge of Quantock Hill, on a stormy day, a thorn which I had often passed in calm and bright weather without noticing it. I said to myself, ‘Cannot I by some invention do as much to make this Thorn an impressive object as the storm has made it to my eyes at this moment.’ I began the poem accordingly.

W was clearly fearful that the poem would be misread. In 1798 he directed the reader that it ‘is not supposed to be spoken in the author's own person: the character of the loquacious narrator will sufficiently show itself in the course of the story’, and for LB 1800 he added a further substantial but defensive note about the nature of the poetry of feeling.

The Idiot Boy

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. W strongly defended the poem in a letter to John Wilson of 7 June 1802: 'I have indeed often looked upon the conduct of fathers and mothers of the lower classes of society towards Idiots as the great triumph of the human heart. It is there that we see the strength, disinterestedness, and grandeur of love'. As late as 1831, W was declaring the ability to enjoy 'The Idiot Boy' the touchstone of a reader's sympathy with his work (letter, 13 June).

Lines Written in Early Spring

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. The IF Note recalls: ‘Actually composed while I was sitting by the side of the brook that runs from the Comb, in which stands the village of Alford, through the grounds of Alfoxden. It was a chosen resort of mine.’

Anecdote for Fathers

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. The Ws were looking after the son of a friend, Basil Montagu. In a letter of 7 March 1796 W reported that the little boy, also called Basil, 'lies like a little devil'.

We Are Seven

Composed Spring 1798. Published LB 1798. Another incident from real life. In the IF Note W recalled that the ‘little Girl who is the heroine I met within the area of Goodrich Castle in the year 1793... I composed it while walking in the grove of Alfoxden.’

Expostulation and Reply

Composed May–June 1798. Published LB 1798. It ‘arose out of conversation with a friend who was somewhat unreasonably attached to modern books of moral philosophy’ (Advertisement to LB 1798) – almost certainly William Hazlitt, who visited Alfoxden in the early summer of 1798.

The Tables Turned

Composed May-June 1798. Published LB 1798.

Lines Written a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey

Composed 11–13 July 1798. Published LB 1798. In LB 1800 W added the note:
‘I have not ventured to call this Poem an Ode; but it was written with a hope that in the transitions, and in the impassioned music of the versification would be found the principal requisites of that species of composition.’

The Fountain

Composed October–December 1798. Published LB 1800.

The Two April Mornings

Composed October–December 1798. Published LB 1800.

30 Derwent's wave: The river which flows past the bottom of the garden of W's birthplace in Cockermouth in the north of the English Lake District.

‘A slumber did my spirit seal’

Composed, as are the following three poems, October–December 1798.
Published LB 1800. In a letter of 6 April 1799 C commented to a mutual friend, Thomas Poole, about this ‘most sublime Epitaph’: ‘whether it had any reality, I cannot say. – Most probably, in some gloomier moment he had fancied the moment in which his Sister might die.’

Lucy Gray

Composed October 1798 – February 1799. Published LB 1800. Noting that the poem was based on a real event told him by DW, W contrasted (IF Note) ‘the imaginative influences which I have endeavoured to throw over common life with [George] Crabbe's matter-of-fact style of treating subjects of the same kind.’

Nutting

Composed October–December 1798, but history complicated. See Lyrical Ballads, and Other Poems, 1797–1800, ed. James Butler and Karen Green (1992), for details of the text printed here and of a longer version. Published LB 1800.

9 my frugal Dame: Ann Tyson, with whom the schoolboy W lodged while he was at Hawkshead Grammar School.

‘Three years she grew in sun and shower’

Composed October 1798–February 1799. Published LB 1800.

The Brothers

Composed December 1799–April 1800. Published LB 1800. Based on a real-life incident, the poem, like Michael, is a conscious attempt at modern Pastoral. See W's letter of 14 January 1801 to Charles James Fox about his intentions. W appended notes at lines 1, 53, 137, 180 and 305. Only two of them are given here.

179–80 The thought of death... among the mountains: ‘There is not anything more worthy of remark in the manners of the inhabitants of these mountains, than the tranquillity, I might say indifference, with which they think and talk upon the subject of death. Some of the country churchyards, as here described, do not contain a single tomb-stone, and most of them have a very small number’ (W's note).

305–6 great Gavel... Egremont: ‘The Great Gavel, so called, I imagine, from its resemblance to the Gable end of a house, is one of the highest of the Cumberland mountains. It stands at the head of the several vales of Ennerdale, Wastdale, and Borrowdale. The Leeza is a river which flows into the Lake of Ennerdale: on issuing from the lake, it changes its name, and is called the End, Eyne, or Enna. It falls into the sea a little below Egremont’ (W's note).

Hart-Leap Well

Composed early 1800. Published LB 1800. W recalled:

The first eight stanzas were composed extempore one winter evening in the cottage [Dove Cottage, Grasmere]; when, after having tired myself with labouring at an awkward passage in ‘The Brothers’, I started with a sudden impulse to this to get rid of the other, and finished it in a day or two. My sister and I had past the place a few weeks before in our wild winter journey from Sockburn on the banks of the Tees to Grasmere. A peasant whom we met near the spot told us the story so far as concerned the name of the well, and the hart, and pointed out the stones.

(IF Note)

97 moving accident: From William Shakespeare, Othello, I.iii.135. In the Preface to LB 1800 W contrasted his with much contemporary poetry by insisting that in his ‘the feeling therein developed gives importance to the action and the situation, and not the action and situation to the feeling.’

From Home at Grasmere

Largely composed 1800. Not published by W. The concluding lines 959–1049 were first presented in the Preface to The Excursion (1814), where W declared them ‘a kind of Prospectus of the design and scope’ of the planned philosophical work The Recluse. W did not complete it and The Excursion was the only part of it to appear in W's lifetime.

97–8 Valley... Emma: W and DW (‘Emma’) took up residence in Dove Cottage, Grasmere, on 20 December 1799.

972 Fit audience: W positions himself in relation to John Milton (1608–74) – described as ‘Holiest of Men’ – through this reference to the invocation to Urania, the Muse of Astronomy, in Paradise Lost, VII, 30–31.

1002–14 I, long... argument: Written most probably in 1806 when W, having completed The Prelude, picked up work again towards The Recluse. The passage should be compared with the closing lines of The Prelude (1805).

FROM POEMS ON THE NAMING OF PLACES

Two poems are printed here from five, written December 1799–October 1800, which were grouped under this title in LB 1800, with a prefatory Advertisement:

By Persons resident in the country and attached to rural objects, many places will be found unnamed or of unknown names, where little Incidents will have occurred, or feelings been experienced, which will have given to such places a private and peculiar interest. From a wish to give some sort of record to such Incidents or renew the gratification of such Feelings, Names have been given to Places by the Author and some of his Friends, and the following Poems written in consequence.

In LB 1800 W added notes identifying the topographical references in the poems.

To Joanna

Joanna Hutchinson (1780–1843) was the sister of Mary, W's wife from October 1802. Place-names in the poem refer to the River Rotha, connecting Grasmere and Rydal lakes, and mountains and hills in the central and more northerly part of the Lake District.

‘A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags’

6 two beloved Friends: DW and C.

Michael

Composed October–December 1800. Published LB 1800. In his letter to Charles James Fox, 14 January 1801, W said that ‘Michael’ and ‘The Brothers’ ‘were written with a view to shew that men who do not wear fine cloaths can feel deeply’, and in another letter, 9 April 1801, observed that in ‘Michael’ he had ‘attempted to give a picture of a man, of strong mind and lively sensibility, agitated by two of the most powerful affections of the human heart; the parental affection, and the love of property, landed property, including the feelings of inheritance, home, and personal and family independence.’ All place-names in the poem not otherwise noted refer to the mountains to the north and west of Grasmere.

268 Richard Bateman: W's note in LB 1800 reads: ‘The story alluded to here is well known in the country. The chapel is called Ings Chapel; and is on the right hand side of the road leading from Kendal to Ambleside.’ Actually Bateman's name was Robert.

424 covenant: Mark of a sacred agreement. The poem draws on biblical usage of the word. See especially Genesis 31:43–55 where Jacob and Laban make a covenant. The King James version of the Bible has been used for citations in the Notes.

‘I travelled among unknown Men’

Composed early 1801 and intended for the 1802 edition of Lyrical Ballads, but not published until P2V.

To a Sky-Lark

Composed March–July 1802. Published P2V. One of the poems of Spring 1802 in which W experimented with metre and diction, to the discomfiture of C who noted ‘here and there a daring Humbleness of Language and Versification, and a strict adherence to matter of fact, even to prolixity’ (letter, 29 July 1802).

Alice Fell

Composed 12–13 March 1802. Published P2V. A real-life incident related to W and DW. See D WJ, 16 February 1802.

Beggars

Composed 13–14 March 1802. Published P2V. Draws on DW's journal. See DWJ, 10 June 1800 and 13 March 1802.

To a Butterfly ('Stay near me')

Composed 14 March 1802. Published P2V, opening a cluster of poems grouped in 1807 (though not thereafter) as 'Moods Of My Own Mind'. D WJ, 14 March 1802, records W refusing to breakfast until he had finished the poem: 'He ate not a morsel, nor put on his stockings but sate with his shirt neck unbuttoned, & his waistcoat open while he did it.'

To the Cuckoo

Composed March–June 1802. Published P2V.

‘My heart leaps up when I behold’

Composed 26 March 1802. Published P2V. From 1815 lines 7–9 became the epigraph for the ‘Ode: Intimations of Immortality’.

To H. C., Six Years Old

Composition (despite apparent specificity of title) uncertain, but March 1802–March 1804. Published P2V. Addressed to C's eldest son, Hartley Coleridge, born 19 September 1796.

‘Among all lovely things my Love had been’

Composed 12 April 1802. Published P2V. For accounts of composition – on horseback – see DWJ, 20 April 1802, and W letter, 16 April 1802, in which he tells C that the poem records an incident between himself and DW ‘about seven years ago’. Reviewers ridiculed it in 1807 and W did not reprint it.

To a Butterfly ('I've watched you')

Composed 20 April 1802. Published P2V.

Resolution and Independence

Composed May–July 1802. Published P2V. DWJ, 3 October 1800, describes the meeting with the old man a little way from W's cottage in Grasmere. The first version of the poem, known in the W circle as 'The Leech Gatherer', was much revised after criticism from W's sister-in-law, Sara Hutchinson. See W letter, 14 June 1802, and for early text P2V, ed. Curtis, pp.317–23.

43 Chatterton: Thomas Chatterton (1752–70), poet, whose death at his own hands became an emblem for many Romantics of how the world treats poetic genius.

45–46 Him... plough: Robert Burns, who influenced W greatly. See also W's lyric 'Address to the Sons of Burns' (1803) and his Letter to a Friend of Robert Burns (1816), Prose, III, 114–136.

107 Leeches: Used in medical practice for blood-letting.

‘Within our happy Castle there dwelt one’

Composed May 1802. Published Poems 1815 as ‘Stanzas written in my Pocket-Copy of Thomson's “Castle of Indolence”’. Text is taken here from early MS. W recalled: ‘Composed in the Orchard, Grasmere, Town-End. Coleridge was living with us much at the time; his son Hartley has said, that his father's character and habits are here preserved in a livelier way than anything that has been written about him’ (IF Note).

‘The world is too much with us’

Composed May 1802–March 1804. Published P2V.

13–14 Proteus... Triton: Figures from classical mythology. Proteus was Neptune's herdsman. Triton was a sea-god, son of Neptune.

The roaring of the ocean is Triton blowing his horn.

‘With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh’

Composed May 1802–March 1804. Published P2V. W defended this sonnet in a letter of 21 May 1807.

‘Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued’

Composed May–December 1802. This text is taken from MS. Revised version published 1820 in the River Duddon collection.

- 1 Dear Native Brooks: An appropriate allusion to C's tribute to a special place of his childhood, ‘Sonnet to the River Otter’, which begins, ‘Dear native Brook!’

‘Great Men have been among us’

Composed May–December 1802. Published P2V, as part of a section called ‘Sonnets Dedicated to Liberty’. At a time of national crisis, when the war against France was intensifying and invasion a real possibility, W summons writers and statesmen from the earlier century of convulsion – all republicans: Algernon Sidney (1622–83), Andrew Marvell (1621–78), James Harrington (1611–77), Sir Henry Vane the Younger (1613–62), John Milton.

‘It is not to be thought of that the Flood’

Composed May–December 1802. Published Morning Post, 16 April 1803, and subsequently P2V.

4 with... unwithstood: From Samuel Daniel's The Civil Wars (1595–1609), II, 7.
During the wartime period, and especially 1802–8, W read intensely in Daniel (1562–1619).

‘When I have borne in memory what has tamed’

Composed May–December 1802. Published Morning Post, 17 September 1803 and subsequently P2V.

‘England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean’

Composed May–December 1802. Published P2V.

Composed by the Sea-Side, near Calais

Composed August 1802. Published P2V. Accompanied by DW, W had travelled to France, taking the opportunity afforded by the ceasefire of the Treaty of Amiens, in order to see Annette Vallon and their daughter, Caroline, and to tell them that he was about to marry Mary Hutchinson. Separated by the war, W and his daughter had never previously met.

‘It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free’

For context and composition see previous note.

12 Abraham's bosom: that is, close to God in Heaven. See Luke 16:22.

To Toussaint L'Ouverture

Composed most probably August 1802. Published Morning Post, 2 February 1803, and subsequently P2V in sequence 'Sonnets Dedicated To Liberty'. Son of a slave, François Dominique Toussaint, surnamed L'Ouverture, became governor of Haiti and resisted Napoleon's edict re-establishing slavery. He died in imprisonment in Paris in April 1803.

14 Man's unconquerable mind: Echoes Thomas Gray's The Progress of Poesy (1757), 1. 65: 'The unconquerable Mind and Freedom's holy flame'.

Composed in the Valley, near Dover, on the Day of Landing

Composed probably 30 August 1802. Published P2V. W's 'fellow-Traveller' on their way back from Calais was DW.

Composed Upon Westminster Bridge

Composed 31 July–3 September 1802. Published P2V. DW, 31 July 1802, records their vision of London irradiated by ‘the sun [which] shone so brightly with such pure light there was even something like the purity of one of nature's own grand spectacles.’

London, 1802

Composed September 1802. Published P2V. In a letter of November 1802 W explained fully why he admired Milton's sonnets, 'manly and dignified compositions'. In the IF Note to another sonnet written then ('Written in London, September 1802') the elderly W recalled how struck he was on his return from France by 'the vanity and parade of our own country, especially in great towns and cities'. Milton, called 'Holiest of Men' in the 'Prospectus' to The Recluse, printed in the Preface to The Excursion, was W's exemplar of the principled poetic life.

‘Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room’

Composed late 1802. Published P2V. W gave a lot of thought to the sonnet form. See a later sonnet, ‘Scorn not the Sonnet’ (not included in this edition) and the lengthy disquisition he sent to Alexander Dyce in a letter of c. 22 April 1883, where W stresses particularly ‘that pervading sense of intense Unity in which the excellence of the Sonnet has always seemed to me mainly to consist.’

Yarrow Unvisited

Composed October–November 1803. Published P2V. W and DW had intended to visit the river Yarrow towards the end of their tour of Scotland in 1803, but they ran out of time. W did see the river in 1814, which he commemorated in ‘Yarrow Visited’. A visit of 1833 resulted in ‘Yarrow Revisited’ (not included in this selection). All the place-names in the poem refer to the borders of Scotland and England around Selkirk and Melrose, a region increasingly special to W because of its connection with his much-valued friend, Sir Walter Scott.

6 winsome marrow: From ‘The Braes of Yarrow’ (1724) by William Hamilton of Bangour, the work referred to as the poem opens.

‘She was a Phantom of delight’

Composed October 1803–March 1804. Published P2V. W said that the subject was his wife, Mary.

Ode to Duty

Composed 1804. Published P2V. The 6th stanza was excised in printings after 1807. In the IF Note W said that the poem was ‘on the model of Gray's Ode to Adversity which is copied from Horace's Ode to Fortune.’ W also provided a reading of the poem in his ‘Reply to “Mathetes”’ (1809–10) (Prose, II, 24–25).

1 Stern Daughter: See Milton's Paradise Lost, IX, 652–3: ‘God so commanded, and left that command/Sole daughter of his voice’.

46 precepts over dignified: Quotation from Milton's The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce (1643).

61 lowly wise: See Paradise Lost, VIII, 173–174.

Ode ('There was a time')

Composed March 1802–March 1804. Stanzas 1–4 belong to 1802; the rest to 1804. Published P2V. The title, 'Ode: Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood', given in 1815. W's finest and most ambitious ode elicited from him one of the most important of the IF Notes; his 1810 Essays on Epitaphs (Prose, II) should also be read in connection with this poem.

Epigraph Paulò majora canamus: Virgil's Eclogues (c.42 BC), IV. i: 'Let us sing a loftier strain'.

58 Our birth is but a sleep: W was sensitive to the accusation that the ideas played with here are incompatible with Christianity and in the IF Note explained:

a pre-existent state has entered into the popular creeds of many nations; and, among all persons acquainted with classic literature, is known as an ingredient in Platonic philosophy... I took hold of the notion of pre-existence as having sufficient foundation in humanity for authorizing me to make for my purpose the best use I could as a Poet.

103 humorous stage: W signals a borrowing from Samuel Daniel's Musophilus (1599) in the sonnet to Fulke Greville, l. I.

‘I wandered lonely as a Cloud’

Composed March 1804–April 1807. Published P2V. DW records in her journal for 15 April 1802 how she and W saw the daffodils along the western shore of Ullswater. In the IF Note W said that lines 15–16, the ‘two best lines in it’, were by his wife. 6–7 In 1815 W added another stanza here:

Continuous as the stars that shine
And twinkle on the milky way,
They stretched in never-ending line
Among the margin of a bay:
Ten thousand saw I at a glance,
Tossing their heads in sprightly dance.

Stepping Westward

Composed 3 June 1805. Published P2V. W, DW, and for some of the way C, went on a tour of Scotland August–September 1803. DW's Recollections of a Tour Made in Scotland A.D. 1803 is a very readable account of experiences on which W drew for poems over the next two years.

The Solitary Reaper

Composed 5 November 1805. Published P2V. As W acknowledged in a note, the poem originated in a sentence in his friend Thomas Wilkinson's Tours to the British Mountains (1824), which W read in MS: 'Passed by a Female who was reaping alone: she sung in Erse [Gaelic] as she bended over her sickle; the sweetest human Voice I ever heard: her strains were tenderly melancholy and felt delicious, long after they were heard no more.'

Elegiac Stanzas

Composed May–June 1806. Published P2V. W saw Peele (or Piel) Castle, off the southernmost tip of the Lake District, when he stayed nearby in 1794. His memory of it was recalled by seeing Sir George Beaumont's painting A Storm: Peele Castle in 1806, and the poem stems from that encounter and W's feelings on the death of his brother John the previous year.

42 Him whom I deplore: John Wordsworth, W's brother, who was drowned 5–6 February 1805 in the wreck of the merchantman he captained, Earl of Abergavenny. 'Deplore' is used here with the now-obsolete meaning 'grieve over'.

54 the Kind!: Now obsolete use meaning 'Nature' or 'Humankind'.

60 Not without hope: as Edward Wilson has pointed out (Review of English Studies. NS 43, 1992) an allusion to St Paul's First Epistle to the Thessalonians (4:13) and the 'Order for the Burial of the Dead' in the Book of Common Prayer: 'O merciful God... who also hath taught us, by his holy Apostle Saint Paul, not to be sorry, as men without hope, for them that sleep in him.'

A Complaint

Composed c. December 1806. Published P2V. W's IF Note says cryptically, 'Suggested by a change in the manner of a friend.' Almost certainly C.

Gipsies

Composed c.26 February 1807. Published P2V. In the IF Note W recalled: 'I had observed them, as here described, near Castle Donnington, on my way to and from Derby.' Two great contemporaries disagreed about how to read this poem. See Keats's letter of 28–30 October 1817, which is a response to Hazlitt's unsympathetic remarks in his essay 'On Manner' (1815; reprinted The Round Table, 1817).

14 Vesper: The Evening Star.

St Paul's

Composed April – early autumn 1808. Not published by W. W's letter of 3 April 1808 records the experience in which the poem originates.

2 Friend: Coleridge.

‘Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind’

Composed 1813–14. Published Poems 1815. ‘Suggested by my daughter Catherine, long after her death’ (IF Note). Catherine Wordsworth, born 6 September 1808, died 4 June 1812.

Yew-Trees

Composed 1811–14. Published Poems 1815. W visited Lorton Vale yew-tree in 1804. In the IF Note W observed of another yew: ‘Calculating upon what I have observed of the slow growth of this tree in rocky situations, and of its durability, I have often thought that [it] must have been as old as the Christian era.’ Lorton Vale and Borrowdale are places in the Lake District; Glaramara is a mountain there.

5 Umfraville or Percy: Names of great northern barons who furnished troops for wars with the Scots.

7–8 bows at Azincour... Poitiers: Battles in France during the Hundred Years War (1337–1453); longbows were made from yew.

Composed at Cora Linn

Composed 1814–1820. Published in The River Duddon (1820). W visited the waterfall on 25 July 1814.

Epigraph – How Wallace... stern Liberty: W teasingly introduces a passage from his unpublished autobiographical poem, published posthumously in 1850 as The Prelude (I, 214–20, 1850 text). William Wallace (?1272–1305) was a Scottish patriot.

20 Wallace Wight: an allusion to Sir Walter Scott's Marmion (1808).

38–41 Marathonian Plain... Leonidas: Refers to the Greek defeat of the Persians at the battle of Marathon, to Leonidas, King of Sparta, who held the pass at Thermopylae against the invading forces of Xerxes.

46 Where Tell... from Uri's lake: William Tell, from the Swiss canton of Uri, legendary hero of the struggle against Austria.

Yarrow Visited

Composed September – October 1814. Published Poems 1815. W saw the river Yarrow at last on 1 September 1814. In a letter of 23 November 1814 he remarked that he feared there might be a ‘falling off’ from the earlier poem on the Yarrow, ‘but that was unavoidable, perhaps from the subject, as imagination almost always transcends reality.’

25–32 Where was it... warning: W alludes to the stories embedded in two other Yarrow poems, William Hamilton's The Braes of Yarrow (1724) and John Logan's poem of the same name (1781).

55 Newark's Towers: a tribute to Scott, whose poem The Lay of the Last Minstrel (1805) is set at Newark Tower.

To B. R. Haydon, Esq. ('High is our calling, Friend!')

Composed late November 1815. Published Poems 1820. Benjamin Robert Haydon (1786–1846), painter, had a volatile relationship with W. This sonnet was, W said, a response to a letter of Haydon's of 27 November, in which he told W how much his friendship meant to him.

Sequel to the Foregoing (Beggars)

Composed 1817. Published Poems 1820, where 'Beggars' is printed preceding it.

2 daedal: poetic; obsolete use, meaning 'varied'.

Ode: Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty

Composed June–December 1817. Published The River Duddon (1820).

The River Duddon: Conclusion

Composed 1818–1820. Published 1820 as conclusion to the sequence of sonnets on the Duddon, a river which flows into the sea in the south-west of the Lake District.

‘The unrelmitting voice of nightly streams’

Composed 1828; 1840–42; 1846. Published 1846 in W's standard Poetical Works.

Airey-Force Valley

Composed 28–9 September 1835. Published Poems, Chiefly of Early and Late Years (1842). Aira Force is on the western side of lake Ullswater. ‘Force’ is a northern English word for ‘waterfall’.

Extempore Effusion upon the Death of James Hogg

Composed November 1835. Published in W's further edition of his Poetical Works, 6 vols., in 1836. 'The persons lamented in these verses were all either of my friends or acquaintance' (IF Note). They were James Hogg (1770–1835); Sir Walter Scott (1771–832); Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834); Charles Lamb (1775–1834); George Crabbe (1754–1832); Felicia Hemans (1793–1835).

1–5 When first... When last: Hogg was with W on his first visit to the Yarrow on 1 September 1814; Scott on his most recent, 20 September 1831.

4 The Ettrick Shepherd: James Hogg was known by this name, a reference to his early occupation and his origins in the borders region of Ettrick Forest.

10 mouldering ruins: Scott is buried at Dryburgh Abbey.

19 Lamb... gentle: Lamb is described as 'gentle-hearted' in C's 'This Lime-Tree Bower my Prison', written in 1797 when W, C and Lamb were all close. W is tying in his last with his earliest memories of both men.

‘Glad sight wherever new with old’

Composed December 1842 – November 1843. Published Poetical Works (1845).

At Furness Abbey

Composed 21 June 1845. Published Poetical Works (1845). The ruins of Furness Abbey are at the south-west of the Lake District area landmass. In The Prelude, II, 99–144, W describes visiting it as a schoolboy. The navvies in the sonnet were building the railway line that still runs alongside the abbey site.

‘I know an aged Man constrained to dwell’

Composed January 1846. Published in Poetical Works (1846). W's early poem 'The Old Cumberland Beggar' protests against work-house incarceration of the poor; after work-house provision was massively increased by the 1834 Poor Law Amendment Act W remained hostile to work-houses and the attitude of mind towards the unfortunate which they emblemized.

from The Prelude

Composed 1798–1850. Published in 1850 shortly after W's death. A two-part autobiographical poem was completed in 1799. A thirteen-book version was finished in 1805, and this is the version represented in the extracts chosen for this edition. Further revision took place over W's lifetime, but the poem in fourteen books which was eventually published was all but finished by 1839. During its long gestation the poem was always referred to in the W circle as the 'Poem to Coleridge' or the 'Growth of a Poet's Mind', titles which locate the poem's origins as an act of self-analysis in 1798 at the beginning of work on the never-to-be-completed philosophical poem The Recluse. The extracts have been chosen to represent the range and variety of a complex poem, which intertwines recollections of the past with reflections of feelings and attitudes about that past and the present at the moment of composition.

Book One

The poem opens by considering possible material and the sources of the poet's inspiration. Childhood experiences are described and analysed for their part in fashioning the poet's mind.

1–115 : W settled in Grasmere in late 1799 and the opening lines of the poem reflect his sense then and later that this was a decisive moment in his life. Allusions at 11. 6–7 and 15–19 to Exodus 13:3 and the concluding lines of Paradise Lost establish that this opening section is poetry and not a gazeteer of W's movements. 'Yon City', 1. 7., is not to be identified specifically.

116 my Friend: C.

271 Was it for this: The two-part poem in 1799 began with this question.

278 sweet Birthplace: W was born at Cockermouth on the northern rim of the Lake District. This is a graceful allusion to a line in C's 1798 poem 'Frost at Midnight': 'already had I dreamt/Of my sweet birth-place, and the old church-tower'.

308 that beloved Vale: The grammar school W entered in 1779 was at Hawkshead on the lake called Esthwaite, and most of the childhood incidents recorded in the poem took place in this area.

317 springes: Snares.

376 Patterdale: The western side of Lake Ullswater.

558 Like Vulcan out of Heaven: In Greek and Roman mythology, Vulcan was blacksmith to the gods – hence 'sooty' reference.

570 Bothnic Main: The northern Baltic.

653 honorable toil: C would have recognized within a direct address to him that this was a reference to the philosophic poem The Recluse, which he and W had conceived in the summer of 1798.

Book Two

The second book continues in the same vein, but with greater emphasis on exploration and definition of terms, and with ground-breaking insistence on the importance of infant experience. The account of W's life brings him up to seventeen years of age, but the book ends with an address to C at the present moment, 1799.

82 Sabine fare: The Roman poet Horace (65–8 BC) celebrated the frugality of his life on his farm in the Sabine Hills.

96 fountain: Here and throughout the poem means 'spring', not ornamental fountain.

108 a Structure: Furness Abbey, on the southern tip of the Lake District.

141 breathed: Allowed the horses to regain breath.

174 the Minstrel of our troop: Robert Greenwood, later a Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.

228 class the cabinet: Classify as for a collection of specimens.

314 best society W's quotation marks draw attention to Paradise Lost, IX, 249: 'For solitude sometimes is best society'.

352 a Friend: John Fleming.

456 in this time: W refers to the present moment, the close of the 1790s, when the hopes for the amelioration of mankind vested in the French Revolution were almost extinguished.

Book Three

Book Three assesses W's experience at Cambridge, beginning the counterpoint of deep truth and surface impressions which continue as a structuring principle throughout the poem.

10 the Place: Cambridge. W entered St John's College on 30 October 1787 and took his BA degree in January 1791.

276–7 Mills... Chaucer: An allusion to Chaucer's Reeve's Tale about a miller at Trumpington.

284 blind poet: John Milton. Paradise Lost, VII, 27 is echoed too in 1. 286.

312 Cassandra: Prophetess, who repeatedly forecast the downfall of Troy. Here the meaning is something like 'doom-laden', 'melancholy'.

Book Four

From the account of W's return to the Lake District for his long vacation, an extract has been chosen which sharpens the focus on the kind of poet W thought he had become. The first part of the extract is the memory of when, at a dawn of more than usual beauty, he first felt dedicated to celebrating the commonplace. The meeting with the discharged soldier directs attention to W's poetic concern with the suffering and homeless.

273 gawds: Alternative spelling for now obsolete 'gauds' meaning 'gaeties'.

318–9 promiscuous rout... tempers: An assembly open to all kinds of people, a mixture of temperaments.

Book Five

Book Five is concerned with education and intellectual and artistic endeavour. The first extract is one of the poem's most haunting passages, about a poet's fears of transience. The second counters false notions of how to educate a child with a return to memories of W's own Lake District childhood.

59 The famous History of the Errant Knight: Cervantes' Don Quixote (1605; 1615).

88 Euclid: Greek mathematician whose great work, the Elements, established geometry.

294 a Child, no Child: Educational theory and practice were much debated topics in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. This passage is an onslaught against those who would force-feed children's intellectual development, favouring the acquisition of factual knowledge against all else.

307 notices: Observations, comments.

322 terms of art: Technical language, professional jargon.

362 pinfold: Enclosure.

364–67 Oh!... St George!: Reference to legend and romance. C and W were at one in believing that a child's imagination could properly be nurtured by immersion in tales such as the Arabian Nights.

470 the dead Man: James Jackson, schoolmaster, who drowned on 18 June 1779.

Book Six

Book Six resumes the chronological movement of the poem with an account of W's walking tour to the Alps in 1790. The climax of the passages chosen is the moment when he and his companion are cheated of their long-awaited experience of the sublime, only to be rewarded with an unexpected compensation. The movement from loss to compensatory gain is the principal energy of the whole poem.

339 Fellow Student: Robert Jones, who remained a life-long friend.

357 federal Day: 14 July 1790, the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille.

Book Seven

Book Seven records W's ambivalence about London and urban life. The passages chosen focus on two moments of epiphanic vision, which contrast with the account of St Bartholomew's Fair, a type, it is claimed, of the 'blank confusion' of city life.

399 fiery furnace: See Daniel 3:23–6 for Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego, who walked through fire unharmed.

650–52 Fair... Bartholomew: The annual St Bartholomew's Fair at Smithfield, East London, the site of execution for Protestant martyrs in the reign of Queen Mary (1553–8).

686 Wax-work: Madame Tussaud's waxwork collection was brought to London in 1802.

687–9 Merlins... Promethean: Merlin was the legendary Prince of Enchanters. Prometheus was the Titan who in Greek myth created Man – hence meaning 'inventive'.

692 Parliament of Monsters: For discussion and illustration of many of the sights mentioned by W, see Richard Altick's fascinating The Shows of London (1978).

Book Eight

A celebration of humble life, particularly but not exclusively that of Lake District shepherds among the mountains, is designed to suggest how the poet's awareness of humankind grew from the education by Nature explored in the first two books of the poem.

75 complacency: Tranquil satisfaction.

86 redounding: Eddying, swirling.

221 Household Dame: Ann Tyson, with whom W lodged while at school in Hawkshead.

229–43 Dove Crag... Helvellyn: All place-names for mountains, valleys, and a lake a little to the north and east of Grasmere, the setting of Michael (1800), the poem for which this incident was originally composed.

408–10 Cross... Chartreuse: W visited the Carthusian monastery near Grenoble during his walking tour of 1790. In a note to Descriptive Sketches (1793) he mentioned the ‘crosses seen on the tops of the spiry rocks of the Chartreuse, which have every appearance of being inaccessible’.

420–22 Corin... Phillis: Common names in pastoral poetry.

Book Nine

With Book Nine the chronological history in the poem resumes with some account of W's sojourn in France, 1791–2, and of his commitment to the ideals of the revolution.

40–64 Through Paris... the Bastille: W arrived in Paris in late 1791. Here he mentions sites of importance in the revolution of 1789, such as the prison, the Bastille, which was taken on 14 July 1789. The 'Field of Mars' (Les Champs de Mars) was the site of violent unrest in July 1791, always referred to as the 17 July 'massacre'. W also refers to the emerging power struggle between the legitimate National Assembly and the Jacobin Club.

78 Magdalene of Le Brun: the painter Charles Le Brun (1619–90).

294 Among that band of officers was one: Michel Beaupuy (1755–96); see Introduction, p. xx.

Book Ten

Book Ten follows the turmoil of W's feelings after war broke out between Great Britain and the fledgling Republic in 1793, and his succeeding sense of moral and intellectual rootlessness when the French began (as W and others thought) to betray the principles of the revolution. The closing lines pay tribute to what C and DW did for W at this time.

38 to Paris I returned: W went to Paris in November 1792, on his way back to England.

42–7 Prison... Carousel: Louis XVI was deposed on 10 August 1792. The Place de Carrousel is a square fronting the Tuileries Palace, which was stormed with great loss of life.

64 September Massacres: 2–6 September 1792, when large numbers of prisoners were executed after a travesty of a trial.

70 manage: The steps and action to which a horse is trained.

77 Sleep no more: Recalls Macbeth, II.ii.35–6.

206 An effort, which though baffled: Success for the campaign waged since 1787 to prohibit slave trading under British aegis did not come until 1807.

229–30 And now the Strength of Britain... Host: War was declared between France and England and allies – soon to include Prussia and Austria – on 1 February 1793.

468–9 Tribe of Moloch... Regent: Alludes to Milton's Paradise Lost, I, 392–3, 'Moloch, horrid king besmeared with blood/Of human sacrifice', for an analogy with Robespierre, who was finally toppled and executed on 28 July 1794.

472–5 a small Village... Leven's: W was staying at Rampside on the south-west tip of the Lake District, near the estuary of the river Leven. In the passage that follows W is taking the regular route across the sands at low tide.

491 Cartmell's rural Town... Teacher: William Taylor (1754–86), headmaster of Hawkshead Grammar School in W's time, is buried at Cartmel Priory, along the coast from Rampside.

548 Could cleanse the Augean Stable: An image of a near-impossible task. Hercules achieved it, cleansing the stables of King Augeas by diverting the rivers Alpheus and Peneus.

549 their own helper: That is, the guillotine.

559 that very Shore: An allusion back to Book Two's account of the schoolboys visiting Furness Abbey (II, 99–144).

806 Philosophy: Generally taken to refer to William Godwin's Enquiry Concerning Political Justice (1793), with its celebration of the power of human reason.

905–8 most precious Friend!... Woman: W met C in September 1795, around the time that DW joined him at Racedown House in Dorset.

932–3 Pope... Emperor: Pope Pius VII was summoned to crown Napoleon Emperor on 2 December 1804.

Book Eleven

Book Eleven searches to explain how W's imaginative powers remained unimpaired. The power of W's earliest experiences through both voluntary and involuntary recall is stressed in the two 'spots of time' passages, which are both given here. Written for the 1799 version of the autobiographical poem, they took their place there among other memories of formative moments in childhood, but in the thirteen-book version, uprooted from that earlier context, they have a more complex function in the poem's economy of loss and gain.

283 honest James: W's grandparents' servant in Penrith, Cumbria.

305 The Beacon: A signal beacon on a hill outside Penrith, where W stayed with his grandparents.

317 two dear Ones: Mary Hutchinson, W's future wife, and DW.

366 my Father's House: John Wordsworth, W's father, died 30 December 1783. The house was in Cockermouth, W's birthplace.

367 my two Brothers: Richard and John Wordsworth.

Book Twelve

The least memorable book of the poem, Book Twelve purports to continue the demonstration that W's creative imagination survived unimpaired. It is rather a miscellany, from which two passages only are given, both of which dwell on the sense W had of what kind of poet he was.

158 Bedlamites: The mentally impaired, so called from the Bethlehem Hospital for the Insane in London.

Book Thirteen

The poem concludes with an experience and a meditation on it, both designed to bring together in a grand definition those characteristics of the creative mind which the poem has been tracing through its length. The relationship between the creative imagination and love, divine and human, is the topic of the second extract (11.149–84). The poem concludes with a tribute to C and a re-dedication of them both to the poetic tasks they had so gleefully envisaged in the summer of 1798.

1–2 excursions... with a youthful Friend: W was on a walking tour of North Wales in 1791 with Robert Jones, the companion of his European tour the previous year.

3 Bethkelet's huts: Bethkelet is an idiosyncratic spelling of the village of Beddgelert.

112–13 soul... intuitive: A distinction drawn from the discussion of moral and intellectual powers in men and angels in Paradise Lost, V, 487–90.

387 ought of worth: A further reference to The Recluse project, conceived in 1798 when W and C were living near the Quantock Hills in Somerset and when they composed the poems mentioned in the following lines... ‘The Ancient Mariner’. ‘Christabe’, ‘The Idiot Boy’ and ‘The Thorn’.

Index of Titles

A Complaint 3
'A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags' (from Poems on the Naming of Places) 112
A Night-Piece 18
'A slumber did my spirit seal' 71
Airey-Force Valley 184
Alice Fell 129
'Among all lovely things my Love had been' 136
Anecdote for Fathers 54
At Furness Abbey 186
Beggars 131
Composed at Cora Linn 173
Composed by the Sea-Side, near Calais 148
Composed in the Valley, near Dover, on the Day of Landing 150
Composed Upon Westminster Bridge 150
'Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued' 145
Elegiac Stanzas 166
'England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean' 147
Expostulation and Reply 59
Extempore Effusion Upon the Death of James Hog 184
Gipsies 169
'Glad sight wherever new with old' 186
Goody Blake and Harry Gill 26

‘Great Men have been among us’ 146

Hart-Leap Well 92

from Home at Grasmere 99

‘I know an aged Man constrained to dwell’ 187

‘I travelled among unknown Men’ 128

‘I wandered lonely as a Cloud’ 164

‘It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free’ 149

‘It is not to be thought of that the Flood’ 146

Lines Written a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey 61

Lines Written at a Small Distance from my House 24

Lines Written in Early Spring 53

London, 1802 151

Lucy Gray 73

Michael 114

‘My heart leaps up when I behold’ 135

‘Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room’ 151

Nutting 75

Ode to Duty 155

Ode: Composed upon an Evening of Extraordinary Splendor and Beauty 180

Ode: Intimations of Immortality from Recollections of Early Childhood 157

Old Man Travelling 3

from The Prelude

Book I 188

Book II 204

Book III 218

Book IV 224

Book V 231

Book VI 241

Book VII 246

Book VIII 252
Book IX 25
Book X 263
Book XI 271
Book XII 275
Book XIII 278
Resolution and Independence 137
Sequel to the Foregoing (Beggars) 178
'She was a Phantom of delight' 154
Song ('She dwelt among th' untrodden ways') 71
St Paul's 170
Stepping Westward 164
'Strange fits of passion I have known' 72
'Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind' 171
The Brothers 78
The Fountain 66
The Idiot Boy 38
The Old Cumberland Beggar 19
The River Duddon: Conclusion 183
The Ruined Cottage 3
The Solitary Reaper 165
The Tables Turned 60
The Thorn 30
The Two April Mornings 68
'The unremitting voice of nightly streams' 183
'The world is too much with us' 144
'Three years she grew in sun and shower' 77
To a Butterfly ('I've watched you') 137
To a Butterfly ('Stay near me') 133
To a Sky-Lark 128
To H. C., Six Years Old 135

To Joanna (from Poems on the Naming of Places) 109
To R. B. Haydon, Esq. ('High is our calling, Friend!') 178
To the Cuckoo 133
To Toussaint L'Oeuverture 149
We Are Seven 56
'When I have borne in memory what has tamed' 147
'With Ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh' 145
'Within our happy Castle there dwelt one' 142
Yarrow Unvisited 152
Yarrow Visited 175
Yew-trees 172

Index of First Lines

Amid the smoke of cities did you pass 109
Among all lovely things my Love had been 136
A narrow girdle of rough stones and crags 112
And is this – Yarrow? – This the Stream 175
A simple child, dear brother Jim 56
A slumber did my spirit seal 71
As one who hangs down-bending from the side 224
A thought is with me sometimes, and I say 231
Behind her, single in the field 165
Dear fellow-Traveller! here we are once more 150
Dear Native Brooks your ways have I pursued 145
Earth has not any thing to shew more fair 150
England! the time is come when thou shouldst wean 147
Fair Star of Evening, Splendor of the West 148
Five years have passed; five summers, with the length 61
From Stirling Castle we had seen 152
Glad sight wherever new with old 181
Great Men have been among us; hands that penned 146
Had this effulgence disappeared 180
High is our calling, Friend! - Creative Art 178
If from the public way you turn your steps 114
I have a boy of five years old 54
I heard a thousand blended notes 53

I know an aged man constrained to dwell 187
I love a public road: few sights there are 275
In one of these excursions, travelling then 278
I saw an aged Beggar in my walk 19
I thought of Thee, my partner and my guide 183
It is a beauteous Evening, calm and free 149
It is not to be thought of that the Flood 146
It is the first mild day of March 24
I travelled among unknown Men 128
It seems a day 75
It was a dreary morning when the Chaise 218
I've watched you now a full half hour 137
I wandered lonely as a Cloud 164
I was thy Neighbour once, thou rugged Pile! 166
Lord of the Vale! astounding Flood! 173
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour 151
My heart leaps up when I behold 135
Not a breath of air 184
Nuns fret not at their Convent's narrow room 151
O blithe New-comer! I have heard 133
Oft had I heard of Lucy Gray 73
Oh there is blessing in this gentle breeze 188
Oh! what's the matter? what's the matter? 26
Once on the brow of yonder Hill I stopped 99
O Thou! whose fancies from afar are brought 135
Pressed with conflicting thoughts of love and fear 176
Returned from that excursion, soon I bade 246
She dwelt among th' untrodden ways 71
She had a tall Man's height, or more 131
She was a phantom of delight 154
Stay near me – do not take thy flight! 133

Stern Daughter of the Voice of God! 155
Strange fits of passion I have known 72
Surprized by joy – impatient as the Wind 171
The Knight had ridden down from Wensley moor 92
The little hedge-row birds 5
The Post-boy drove with fierce career 129
There are in our existence spots of time 271
There is a change – and I am poor 169
There is a thorn; it looks so old 30
There is a Yew-tree, pride of Lorton Vale 172
There was a roaring in the wind all night 137
There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream 157
These Tourists, Heaven preserve us! needs must live 78
The sky is overspread 18
The unremitting voice of nightly streams 183
The world is too much with us; late and soon 144
This was the time in which enflamed with hope 263
Three years she grew in sun and shower 77
Through Paris lay my readiest path, and there 259
Thus far, O Friend! have we, though leaving much 204
‘Tis eight o'clock, – a clear March night 38
Toussaint, the most unhappy Man of Men! 149
‘Twas summer and the sun was mounted high 5
Up! up! my friend, and clear your looks 60
Up with me! up with me into the clouds! 128
Well have you Railway Labourers to THIS ground 186
We talked with open heart, and tongue 66
We walked along, while bright and red 68
‘What you are stepping westward?’ – ‘Yea’ 164
When first, descending from the moorlands 184
When I have borne in memory what has tamed 147

When the third Summer brought its liberty 241
Where are they now, those wanton Boys? 178
‘Why, William, on that old grey stone 59
With deep devotion, Nature, did I feel 252
Within our happy Castle there dwelt one 142
With ships the sea was sprinkled far and nigh 145
Yet are they here? – the same unbroken knot 169

* See Hamilton's Ballad as above.